1. MOMMER: "What's this? A telegram from Popper! 'Come home at once. Am very ill.' Oh, this is awful! I must pack my trunk and be off by the next train."
LEANDER (aside): "By Jove! Charley Onthespot is a brick for sending that telegram for me."

2. LEANDER (aside): "Ye gods! I never thought of THIS! Ha! ha! But she is going! going! going! I'll stand anything for such a consummation."
MOMMER: "Now that is off, we'll pack the bags, Lulu."
LULU: "Now hurry, Leander, dear."

3. MOMMER: "Hurry, hurry! I do believe he would like me to miss that train."
LULU: "Yes, hurry, Leander."
LEANDER: "Heavens! I never calculated on this! A mile to the station, and these bags weigh about a thousand pounds! But it is worth it. She is going at last. It's worth it."

4. MOMMER AND LULU: "Well, of all things! Popper!"
POPPER (stepping off train): "Why, what does all this mean? YOU are going away, Mommer? And I coming to spend a day or two. ME sick? NO! No, I sent no telegram. Some one has played a joke on you all."
LEANDER (aside): "Gee whiz! I see MY finish."

5. MOMMER: "It was one of his scurvy tricks to get me away."
POPPER: "I'll wager he'll wish he hadn't tried it by the time he is through."
LULU: "It just serves him right."
LEANDER: "Ye gods! Why did my evil genius suggest such a scheme?"

6. MOMMER: "Yes, and when you get that trunk up to the third floor come down and carry up the four grips."
POPPER: "He must have wanted exercise when he concocted that scheme."
LULU: "Oh, Leander, I hope this will teach you a lesson."
LEANDER: "Oh, woe is me! I'm all in this time, sure!"

TOO SMART A RASCAL TO KEEP IN JAIL.

So Amazing Were the Exploits of This Bold Robber That Emperor William Said, "One Man Like Him Is Worth a Whole Army Corps in Time of War."

ZOLLWITZ'S TWO CARTOONS WITH THE KAISER AS A MONKEY AND AS A JUMPING JACK, ILLUSTRATING THE HUGE JOKE ON THE GERMAN ARMY WHICH HAS KEPT ALL EUROPE LAUGHING FOR TWO WEEKS.

A POOR tramp of a soldier has made such a "monkey" of Kaiser William and all his army that the Emperor has been obliged to forgive him and even to join in a strained way in the universal laughter at his expense.

Dressed as a captain of the Grenadier Guards this tramp ordered a company of soldiers and some policemen he met in the streets of Koepenick to follow and obey without question. This they did, keeping away the crowd and assisting solemnly in robbing the town hall of $1,000 and in carrying off the burgomaster and treasurer, while the tramp marched off with the cash.

All this was done in the name of the Kaiser and almost under his imperial nose near Berlin.

In no country but Germany could such a thing have happened. The Kaiser had trained his entire male population in the army, and they have been taught that "to hear is to obey." The German citizen or soldier obeys the command of any man in officer's uniform without question and without noticing whether the order is absurd or fatal.

Everyone in Hamburg, for instance, knows of the company of soldiers who were ordered to march down a street toward the harbor. The officer in command stopped into a manhole in the street and broke his leg. While the unfortunate man was picking himself up the company passed out of ear-shot and did not hear his command to halt.

On they went, heedless of two ununiformed citizens and a woman whom the officer sent after them with orders and explanations. Their ears were deaf to any ununiformed person. The street ended in a dock, and the dock ended in the water, and in the water also three members of the company ended their lives, for every man marched straight ahead off the end of the dock into the water. The last of the company jumped upon the heads of the first.

Apoplexy striking another officer caused a body of infantry to "mark time" against a stone wall from 6 p. m. till daylight.

Privates when off duty salute any officers they meet by executing the famous "goose step." This consists of a series of stiff-legged kicks out in front, with first one foot and then the other, until the officer has passed. If any man, woman or child happens to be just in front of the soldiers they will receive several sharp kicks before they can get out of the way.

So when William Voight, a poor vagabond who had spent half of his forty-eight years in jail for vagrancy, larceny and forgery, found his appearance and record too bad to let him make an honest living, he bethought himself of the military.

"An officer can do no wrong," is one of the native German's articles of faith. So Voight's first step was to steal a complete, though somewhat shabby, uniform of a captain of the Grenadier Guards. The coat was too loose and the hat was a little too small, but what did that matter?

Most German officers wear corsets and pad their shoulders. So Voight, looked over the clothes line of his native town of Tilsit, and the next morning a human Hausfrau bewailed her loss. With plump dexterity of padding on shoulders, a clean shave, his corsets laced tightly, and a supercilious air, the tramp sailed forth and took the train to Koepenick.

Elbows out, and sword dangling and swinging so that he took up the entire sidewalk, he marched from the station through peaceful, harmless Koepenick. Men and women stepped aside to let him pass, knowing that nobody examined into.

Before long he encountered the very present military in the form of a company of soldiers who had just left their barracks for a few hours' freedom. At sight of the captain's uniform up went the feet in the "goose step."

The tramp strode up to them and shouted: "Halt! My order from the very most exalted source (Auf Allerhochsten Befehl), I charge you to follow me and obey."

The face of the man was haggard, his mustache was straggly, the uniform was spotted and wrinkled, but it was a uniform, so of course the man within it must be obeyed.

"So Befehl," they answered, and ceased goosing.

The tramp proceeded pompously and funny to form the company into fours and march them toward the Town Hall. A few more privates on various errands were encountered on the way, stopped and impressed into service.

Two officers saluted, looked curious, but bowed and departed when Voight hissed: "Auf Allerhochsten Befehl."

Two policemen stepping humbly aside, were ordered to follow up in the rear. Ten more men carrying rifles and armed with ball cartridges, under command of a non-commissioned officer, were met in sight of the Town Hall.

The men fell in line and the officer "Auf Allerhochsten Befehl" was sent back to Berlin to report that his men had been regularitioned by an officer in uniform.

"Let no one escape," he ordered, sending a detachment to come upon the unsuspect ing municipal authorities from the rear. Throwing out a skirmish line, the main party advanced upon the front door. As reserve the ten soldiers with ball cartridges stayed with their commander.

The manoeuvre was well executed, with fine skill and discipline the troops surrounded the building and stood guard at every door and window. Then the two policemen, with bayonets fixed, entered the building with Herr Hauptman Voight at their head.

By Langerhans, the venerable Burgomaster of Koepenick, and several clerks who worrey in question appeared at the door of his office.

"Are you the treasurer of the town of Koepenick?"

"Jawohl Herr Hauptman."

"Auf Allerhochsten Befehl—open the safe that I may receipt for the funds."

"Donnerwetter! Warum?"

"Auf Allerhochsten Befehl—open the safe or I will shoot you dead."

"Was ist—" began the Burgomasten, looking over his spectacles.

"You are under arrest."

"Potztausend! Warum?"

"Auf Allerhochsten Befehl—where is the treasurer?"

With his mouth open, the amazed Dr. Langerhans led the way to the treasurer's office.

"Are you the treasurer of the town of Koepenick?"

"Jawohl Herr Hauptman."

"Then you are under arrest."

"Donnerwetter! Warum?

"Auf Allerhochsten Befehl—open the safe and give me a receipt for the funds."

Really the Burgomaster and treasurer looked at each other, then the treasurer opened the safe and counted the money, he seemed it was now more than $1,000, a fact which he counted it through twice binself and then made a receipt, signed as Burgomaster and gave it to the soldiers, with their rifles kept the curious in return for the money which was sent in search of a carriage.

Then, commanding the two prisoners to put on their hats and coats and follow, he led them to the doorsteps, where all had made two most irreverent cartoons, which are shown on this page, picturing the Kaiser as a monkey and jumping jack. The cartoons acted like a charm. Flaring a soldier on the driver's seat and another behind he ordered the burgomaster to get in, and graciously allowed his wife to sit with him.

"Drive to the guard house, the Neus Wache, in Berlin," he ordered. "I will go by train and await you."

In a second carriage the trembling treasurer was sent similarly guarded to the same destination.

Then the captain placed his remaining men on guard in different parts of the hall and told them to stay until relieved. With a salute he turned and marched off toward the railroad station.

Dinner time came and went. The afternoon wore on, the soldiers pulled in their belts and bemoaned their luck. Supper time also passed, and some were relaxing discipline so far as to send money to a shop for beer and something to eat, when two carriages drove up furiously.

German military red-tape had at last awakened sufficiently to find that somebody had desecrated the sacred German uniform and, horror of horrors, had used, without warrant, the mystic words: "Auf Allerhochsten Befehl."

General and Aide-de-Camp Count von Moltke arrived upon the scene with detectives and several other officers. The air was full of explosive utterances in German when Major Prince Joachim Albrecht of Prussia galloped down the street followed a little later by the return of the two carriages and their occupants which had left earlier in the day.

A long conference and much examination of witnesses and a long stenographic report of it all followed. This was sent to the Kaiser and the soldiers were relieved without either censure or commendation, for they had done their obvious duty.

Emperor William was furious. Germany was being laughed at; his pet, the army, was being cartooned on postal cards and in the comic papers, and, worst of all, his own imperial self, ruling the Fatherland by divine right, had been made a monkey of.

He could see that it was so, and, what's more, Zollwitz, the Vienna cartoonist, men don't live too long."

Just Cause for a Girl to Break Her Engagement.

ONE of the most foolish acts of which a woman can be guilty is the contraction of an engagement which it is much worse to marry a man she has become distasteful to her when, not love. But under what circumstances against her better judgment, and know is a girl justified in breaking off her engagement? One more suitable opportunity for the subscription which most heartlessly presents itself to a union with a man for whom her love has turned to aversion, she allows herself to be driven to the altar by which one being nothing but misery into her life.

It is a last resource, certainly, to break off an engagement after the announcement of a few weeks only.

THE LOVE IDYL of the LOVELIEST GIRL IN ALL ENGLAND

Will Cupid be Conqueror in His Triple Alliance Against the King of England?

The photograph of Little Lady Marjorie, Which the Prince Fell in Love With.

PRINCE ARTHUR, OF CONNAUGHT.

London, Nov. 16.

WHAT which has never occurred before is expected to happen in England. The English court and society on both sides of the Atlantic is gossiping delightedly about the anticipated event. An English prince will make a love match. King Edward's nephew is to be permitted to marry his ideal—perhaps, in spite of all denials. One denies so much under such delicate circumstances.

But if a prince's love has its full sway, Prince Arthur will be the only man of the blood royal of Queen Victoria of England, who has ever really been permitted to wed the woman of his choice. Court beauties behind their fans are whispering "Edward is King of England, but Cupid is king of kings. It is the most romantic match since Prince George's excursion with his first love, the beautiful daughter of Admiral Seymour, of Malta." The little love god has achieved the climax of his career. He has overthrown the custom of a century in the most powerful court in the world. It has been a long campaign and a trying one for the donnili god is not a patient one. He would have abandoned it long ago had he had a less beautiful ally than Marjorie Manners. It is an honor for even so potent a monarch as the love god to have as ally the loveliest girl in England.

Master Cupid went more systematically than usual about his task. The tactics of Cupid are usually military ones, the tactics of the scrie, the sharp skirmish, the cavalry charge. A dash, a flash, a blaze, and victory for both sides. But to bring about the love match that should amaze an empire it was necessary that he should lay siege and wait, wait as it seemed to the love youngster an interminable time, while there were so many matches to be made. First, he had to wait for two young persons, a royal and a noble, to grow up and be quite sure they knew their own minds, and, what was much more to his purpose to make quite sure that they knew their own hearts. His next task was to overcome the prejudices of a duke, that duke the brother of a king. Lastly he had to tumble over a century old hide-bound custom in England, and harder than any of these, to make a king change his mind.

All of these Cupid has done, which puts the other observation of the ladies in waiting in the court of England, the wise Cons whispered behind screening fans, that Cupid is the mightiest and the proudest monarch in the world.

LADY MARJORIE MANNERS.

The story began nine years ago, when little Prince Arthur, the nephew of the King, and son of the Duke of Connaught, was fagging for William Waldorf Astor, Jr., at Eton. Victoria's favorite grandson, by the fortunes of school, was assigned to fag for the great grandson of a fur trader of America. Had young Astor insisted upon his fashionable rights granted by the Persian and Median laws of Eton, he would have been compelled to black his master's boots. Considerately, the American employed a "boots," boy the Prince carried his letters to him, sharpened his leadpencils, saw to it that he had fresh ink and clean blotters and carried to the class room the books the young American had forgotten. Briefly, Prince Arthur was young Astor's errand boy, and the proof of his amiability and democracy was that he was an amiable and energetic one. He forgot that he was a Prince of the royal family and remembered only that he was in a lower form and that his duty was to serve his upper form master even as Tom Brown's slaves did his bidding at Rugby.

It was while doing fag duty that he came upon an illustrated magazine in Astor's rooms, and turning the brown waves breaking upon the pearly shores of two small ears that pierced the pale imperthently. The forehead, he noted, was broad and full, an unusual forehead for a child.

"She must be about as old as me," he observed ungrammatically, and young Astor thought, looking up from his pipe, irreverently.

"Stop mooning, youngster," aloud, "finish dusting that table."

A few perfunctory dabs at the table with a feather duster, and the English servant moved" one or other of these objects as the occasion required.

Another lady firmly believed that there was a live frog inside her.

At last a surgeon was called in who, after due preparation, performed an imaginary operation and showed her a living frog as having been extracted from her interior.

She was much relieved and very grateful, but the next day she was in worse case than before. She insisted that the frog had left a family of young frogs behind it.

But the surgeon was equal to the occasion. He gravely assured her that the frog he had extracted was a male frog and that such an untoward happening was an impossibility.

Cupid, seeing him place it in a corner of his writing desk, smiled and wrote two names in his private and personal notebook.

"True, they are only fifteen, but I've begun with them younger than that," he mused.

The next year Prince Arthur paid a visit to the Kingdom of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, in Germany. It was to be his kingdom, the Duke of Connaught gravely informed him, and the Prince made no reply. To his classmates at Eton he was more candid.

"I'd like to chuck it," he declared.

"Why?" chorused the boys, who would have been princes if they could.

"Well, I played golf over there, don't you know, with some of my cousins and some other archdukes, and German officers acted as caddies, and made military salutes when they handed them the balls. I don't like it, don't you know." And he could not be persuaded to accept the throne of the German principality.

Eton and Oxford claimed much of the young man's thought after that, but the picture of the little girl, locked in a drawer, was often taken from it, and upon it were poured the oblations of a prince's admiration.

It was when she was presented at court that Lady Marjorie Manners, executing gracefully the difficult court obeisance, looked up and caught the gaze of a young man of her own age fastened upon her. That was not unusual. Since her coming out she had become used to that form of admiration. But this, somehow, was different. Her heart beat curiously, its erratic actions being reflected in a blush upon her smooth, round cheek. Seeing which Cupid smiled again, remembering the entry in his book during Prince Arthur's Eton days.

That evening Prince Arthur, with Cupid's able assistance, contrived to be presented to one who was in his eyes more regal than his aunt, Queen Alexandra, to whom she had sent the knee that afternoon. It is curious how quickly young persons can become acquainted, if one has thought that he knew the other ever since his Eton days. And it is curious how such young persons can manage to see each other every day afterward. It was so curious that it attracted the keen eyes of King Edward VII. He summoned his brother, the Duke of Connaught.

"He is capable of any sort of democracy. You yielded to him when he refused the throne of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, offered to him when his uncle Alfred died. Be firm this time. I command it."

"Certainly. Certainly."

"It is not impossible that he may some day be King of England. She must not be permitted to be thrown in his way. It's unwise for both of them."

"I will send him away," declared the Prince's father.

"For a long time," warned His Majesty.

"Around the world for a year, perhaps two," assented the Duke of Connaught.

And Cupid smiled again. Better than duke or king he knew the potency of a portrait torn from a magazine, and memory of the loveliest face and the sweetest voice in England. Prince Arthur went around the world. When he returned he went to Africa. Why should a prince of the reigning family risk his life in war? The King and his brother, the Duke, knew, and Prince Arthur and lovely Lady Marjorie Manners suspected. But the Prince returned from the war—as he had returned from his trip around the world—the faded portrait from an old magazine worn in the pocket nearest his heart.

Absence had failed. The King and a duke put their heads together, but a faithful prince, a lovely girl and sly Cupid formed a triple alliance. While the King and the Duke fumed and fretted, the Prince and the girl and the love god waited—and they who wait usually win.

There were increasingly many betes to the crown in the family of the Prince of Wales, the King's son. Six of these stood between Prince Arthur and his throne, whereas, at the outset of his romance, there had been two. Upon this princely family the son of the King's nephew looked with delight. "Each baby brings me nearer to my ideal," he said.

"To Lady Marjorie Manners," some one suggested.

"To my ideal," he repeated, "and to the life of a country gentleman, which is all that I ever wanted to be."

And Lady Marjorie Manners had done nothing but be her own adorable self, besides waiting. King Edward, won by their long waiting and by the loveliness of the loveliest girl in England, has considered that a prince of England might marry outside the chill circle of royalty. And the world has accepted as true the verdict of the court ladies that Cupid is the greatest of all kings.

THE LATEST PHOTOGRAPH OF LADY MARJORIE.

Some Strange Cures by Imaginary Surgery.

THE recent case of a Frenchwoman described in this newspaper, who suffered keenly from the belief that she had a lizard in her stomach, but who was cured by a skilful surgeon, who performed an imaginary operation and produced a lively lizard for her inspection as its result, has again brought up the question as to how far it is permissible for reputable physicians and surgeons to adopt such methods.

The method employed by this French surgeon, of course, savored of quackery, but, it is argued, the real purpose of medicine is to cure and when legitimate means fail the physician or surgeon has a right to resort to imaginary medicine or operations, especially when the disease itself is imaginary.

At all events, such methods have frequently been resorted to, and, as a rule, have received commendation.

One case known in medical annals is that of a lady of rank who had an incredible persuasion that all kinds of foreign bodies found their way into her throat and stuck there. Nothing was ever to be seen, but she was not to be satisfied with the most solemn assurance to that effect. So she went on, spluttering and choking, especially when she went out to dinner, till life became a burden to her and to those about her.

At last she found a physician who relieved her suffering.

The method was simplicity itself.

He hid in a stock of small coins, fragments of bone, feathers, small tangles of hair, pieces of wax and the like unconsidered trifles, and triumphantly "produced" from the throat of the lady in question.

HINSHAW IN CUSTODY

PRISON TO WHICH HE RETURNS FOR LIFE

"Mercy for You, A Minister of the Gospel? NO!"

Said Governor Hanly to the Rev. W. E. Hinshaw, and with the Superb Scorn of These Words Ringing in His Ears the Clergyman Had to Slink Back to His Cell.

NEVER again, probably, will there be witnessed a scene so remarkable and so pathetic as that which occurred a few days ago in the private room of Governor Hanly, of Indiana.

Seated at one side of the Governor's desk, his face stern and set, was a wronged husband. At a little distance sat his wife, her head bowed in grief and shame, while two of her three children hung frightened and weeping about her neck. Her third child, too young to understand the wretched meaning of the scene, sat on the floor looking about him with wondering eyes.

Another—and the most noticeable figure in the group, standing opposite the implacable husband and facing the Governor, was a handsome man, not yet middle-aged, attired all in ministerial black.

This was the Rev. William E. Hinshaw, who had served in the State Penitentiary ten years of a life sentence for the murder of his wife in 1895, and who had been pardoned "during good behavior" by Governor Hanly's predecessor, Governor Durbin.

The husband and wife were Mr. and Mrs. George Freeman. The minister and Mrs. Freeman had been sweethearts in their youth.

Governor Hanly, "the moral crusader," in that office, who had been bred a poor, hard-working farm boy, had received proofs that Hinshaw's "behavior" had not been "good." The implacable island had helped to gather these proofs, which showed that the ex-minister of the gospel had broken up his home. So was the accuser.

When the evidence had been placed before him the Governor rose to Hinshaw.

"What have you to say?" he asked.

The Vain Appeal of Her Husband.

"I have nothing to say," answered the trembling man in a clergyman's garb.

The Governor rose on the woman:

"Why, did you do such a thing? How could you so far forget yourself?"

"How can I speak in my children's presence?" she sobbed. "I was wronged, I was deceived, betrayed."

The Governor looked at her pityingly and then at the husband as though in appeal for her. But the husband said, without so much as a glance in her direction:

"After I leave her here I will never see my wife again."

The woman burst into a paroxysm of remorseful grief, rising and holding out her hands to her husband:

"George, my husband, do not leave me. You are the father of my children. They and I depend on you. Forgive me; I was not in my right mind. Wa[illegible] alone. Forgive me; [illegible] was betrayed by the man. I love only you."

She staggered to the little son on the floor and said, as he hid the boy out to his father:

"See, George, baby at you; he loves you—he loves me."

The husband would not and rushed out of the room. The wife in a half-swoon, sank back into her chair with all three children weeping about her.

The Governor steadied his voice with difficulty and turned to Hinshaw, the man who still wore the black coat of a clergyman, as one of all this sundering of the closest of human existence, and said:

"The Governor of Indiana orders that the first sentence be fulfilled; that you go for remainder of your life to the prison whence you came——"

"Have mercy," broke in the wretched man.

The Governor brought his hand down on his desk, and his voice rang with contempt.

"Mercy for you, once a minister of the gospel? No!"

He summoned, an officer, and the ex-minister was led from the room to resume the life punishment from which good conduct would have saved him.

Slandered the Man He Injured.

Then, turning to Mrs. Freeman, the Governor said:

"Not as governor, but as a man, my heart overflows with pity for you."

The woman and her children were sent to their home; but the woman's punishment was to be less severe than that of the man. Through the intervention of friends, and on account of the children, the husband was induced to overlook his wife's errors and to remain with her in the home they had shared so long and happily.

"During good behavior." Hinshaw's behavior was not good even during this hearing before the Governor. His attitude—that of a man who had no appreciation of the crime he had committed in breaking up a happy family—exasperated Governor Hanly.

The former clergyman attempted to show that Freeman, after discovering all, had agreed to keep still if he was given $10,000. Hinshaw said that when he had refused to pay that price, Freeman had agreed to accept $2,000, which proposition was also rejected.

The evidence submitted to the Governor showed that Hinshaw had hardly been released from the penitentiary on parole, a year ago, before he began his persecutions of his old sweetheart, Mrs. Freeman. Upon receiving his parole, the ex-clergyman, still under a life sentence, had resumed without court action at the pleasure of the Governor of the State, went to live with his aged mother, at Winchester, Indiana.

Mrs. Freeman had known Hinshaw's mother from girlhood and had continued to visit her. One of these visits occurred soon after Hinshaw's return.

It must be understood that most of the clergyman's old friends had stood by him. They never believed that he had murdered his wife. Considering him a martyr to Justice, they now did everything possible to assure him of their faith and confidence in him.

Naturally his old sweetheart, with the most innocent motives, treated him with marked kindness. While she was visiting at his mother's house with her little son he took her out driving, and paid her many other attentions. At first she attributed his affectionate manner to innocent recherche of old days, and to his natural delight in realizing that his conviction of a dreadful crime did not bias her against him.

But soon she realized exactly what was in his mind—he was trying to win her away from her husband.

At first she repulsed him. She returned to her home. In the meantime Hinshaw had gathered a congregation about him in the little town of Lyan. Mrs. Freeman visited friends there and heard of his old sweetheart, Mrs. Freeman. Upon this opportunity to renew his attentions it became more and more hard for her to resist him. He had retained his good looks, his graceful and upright manner and his fund of gay humor.

Before returning home to Indianapolis she paid another visit to Hinshaw's mother, who was bedridden. She spent the night there with her little boy, sleeping downstairs near her hostess. In the morning she and the little boy went alone to the station and took the train for home.

They had to change cars at Shirley. When she stepped out upon the platform she was greeted by Hinshaw. He had smuggled himself aboard the train at a coal dock near Shirley and hidden himself until she had left the train.

His manner and language were so importunate—especially as he threatened to follow her to her home—that she was frightened. Besides, she had felt her old love for the man returning and all her scruples being overcome. When he insisted that she and the boy go with him to the hotel in Shirley she had no longer the strength to refuse.

Various witnesses connected with the hotel told Mr. Freeman afterward, and then told Governor Hanly, how Hinshaw and Mrs. Freeman and her little son remained at the hotel until noon the following day. At Hinshaw's request a cot was passed in the room for the child.

REV. W. E. HINSHAW, AS PHOTOGRAPHED WHILE ON PAROLE.

MRS. GEORGE FREEMAN, WHOSE HUSBAND UNMASKED THE GUILTY PREACHER.

Mr. Freeman's first knowledge of this episode came in the [illegible] of an anonymous letter, with which he hughingly confronted his wife.

He would have thought no more of it when he jokingly proposed going to Shirley to investigate and she not so persistently objected to such a course.

Quietly then the husband went to Shirley and collected all the proofs. Returning, he confronted his wife. She broke down and confessed all—much as above described.

Thereupon he bade her good-bye, saying that he would sell all his property and give her the proceeds.

Mrs. Freeman begged for forgiveness and—as she did later in the Governor's room—pleaded with their little son in her arms. The child made the husband's resolution doubly hard for him to keep, for the little fellow held out his arms crying:

"I love you, papa, and I don't like that other man."

But Freeman tore himself away and immediately made his appeal to Governor Hanly—with the result already told.

The Rev. William E. Hinshaw is now back in the Indiana penitentiary for life—with another crime upon his soul.

The trial of Hinshaw in 1895 marked the most celebrated criminal case in the history of Indiana.

Early on the morning of January 10, 1895, the residents of the little town of Belleville, Hendricks county, heard a pistol shot, then cries for help. The sounds came from the residence of the Rev. William E. Hinshaw, pastor of the Methodist Church. A revival meeting was in progress that week. Neighbors found Hinshaw, in his night clothing, lying in the front yard writhing in agony and with blood streaming from bullet wounds and cuts in his body, reddening the snow that had begun to fall.

Apparently dazed, the preacher was repeating, "They have killed her! Mrs. Hinshaw was found lying on the back porch of the house, dressed in her night clothing and dying from a bullet wound in the head. For hours physicians worked with the couple, trying to bring them out of danger. Hinshaw recovered consciousness before noon, but his wife died at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Not one word did she utter concerning the attack that had been made upon her. The husband, once in possession of his senses, told a story of burglars and murderous assault. He said he fought with the burglars, out through the doors of the house and into the yard, where he was wounded. His wife, he said, had been awakened by the struggle, had jumped out of bed and had run through the kitchen, being shot in the temple as she ran. Mrs. he said, had seen him with a roll of money at a store in Stilesville that afternoon.

Husband Found Guilty.

At the time Hinshaw's story was accepted and residents of the town organized searching parties to run down the supposed murderers, but they failed to get any trace of them.

Then the web gathered around the clergyman husband so closely that a prolonged trial resulted in his conviction and a life sentence.

In releasing him ten years later on parole Governor Durbin said:

"Ten years have passed to a day since the tragedy, and while the passions and prejudices which aroused the people of the State during the continuance of the trial have been allayed nothing has occurred to dispel the cloud which has enveloped the case from the beginning. After all these years of imprisonment, during which Hinshaw has so conducted himself as to win the respect of the prison officials, and knowing as I do that the safety of society will in no wise be threatened by his return to it, I am willing to give this man the benefit of the doubt which has grown in my mind as I have given this case consideration without being influenced by pressure or prejudice and permit him to return to an aged and afflicted mother who has not many months to live. I have, therefore, issued a parole to William E. Hinshaw, continuing at the pleasure of the Governor of the State."

Who will say that Governor Durbin's [illegible] was not right in revoking that parole?

WOULDN'T THIS MAKE YOUR FLESH CREEP?

If You Were Quietly Primping Yourself Before Your Mirror In the Sanctity of Your Own Bedchamber and Suddenly Out of Nowhere a Face Like This Peeped Just Over Your Shoulder?

Mrs. Fillippo Vittano.

The Bedroom of Mrs. Vittano, Where She Saw the Face of the Robber in Her Looking Glass.

IMAGINE that you are a woman, alone in your bedroom late at night, and as you stand before your mirror you see that the eyes of a portrait on the opposite wall are rolling fiercely as they regard you; and when you shriek in terror a burglar bounds out from behind the picture and seizes you by the throat—all of which has lately happened in real life just as it has in famous fiction!

Last week on both sides of the Atlantic this was proven at nearly the self same hour.

Mrs. Filippo Vittano is a beautiful young Roman woman who is visiting relatives in Brooklyn, N. Y. Her bedchamber is remote from the sleeping apartments of the rest of the family. This is her story as told to her small nieces and nephews who slept soundly in other rooms, and who may set down some time their recollections of it under the title "The Adventures of My Aunt."

"I had been writing letters and sat late. It was 12:30 when I addressed the last letter and began to prepare for bed. I had thrown on my night gown and sat down before the mirror to comb my hair. Passing the brush quickly over my hair my thoughts flew back to my home, where it had been carried by the letters. 'In a few minutes I shall be asleep and dreaming of Roma,' I said to myself and smiled, when suddenly I had a strange sensation.

"It was the curious feeling one has when he listens to a ghost story, as of the flesh creeping and the skin rising in little puckers. I felt as though silently some one had entered the room and was near me.

"I closed my eyes and prayed to the Virgin. 'Holy Mother,' I whispered to myself, 'Save me from this evil thing.'

"Even while I prayed it seemed to me that I heard someone breathe softly very near me and I shuddered. Like a child in the dark I was afraid to turn around.

"My body grew cold and something seemed to lock the speech in my throat. Yet I dared not give way to this strange feeling. It seemed to me there was a menace in the room, and I must combat that which menaced me.

"Slowly and fearfully I raised my eyes. From the darkest corner of the room a dark face of a brigand peered over my shoulder. I smiled to myself. I had been frightened, and by what?

"Merely the old, faded portrait by a forgotten master, of a fierce brigand of the Apennines who had been dead for a hundred years.

"I smiled again, but as I smiled my blood stopped still in my veins. The face so like that of the portrait had moved. The eyebrows twitched nervously. Ten lines about the lips settled into cruel grooves. Behind me, unconscious that I saw him in the mirror, was a modern brigand. I was facing the quick, not a portrait of the dead.

"I am small and lithe and quick, so quick that my father used to call me his little panther. Instantly I sprang toward the door that opened upon the corridor leading to the rooms where my sister and her children slept. But quick as I was the man whom I had mistaken for the portrait was quicker. He sprang between the door and me, cursing. His big, hairy hands, like the paws of a gorilla, closed over my throat.

"But my hands were free. My nails were long. Like a panther I thrust my nails into his cheek, upon the neck that was bare at the throat, for his shirt collar was open and had fallen back.

"At that second the door opened and three other men entered, men like himself—big, hideous men. They searched the room, while the man tried to force me to my knees. 'Help me hold this little wild cat,' he said, and one of the men left the dresser drawer upon which he came to my side. The big ruffian's face was bleeding.

"He released me to wipe his face, believing that his companion's hands would close as quickly over my throat as his knife over me.

But the other man was slower. Before he seized my throat I rose to my feet and shrieked wildly twice. It was like the cry of the dying. Sharp and shrill and high it echoed through the house.

"The men looked at each other, at me. The leader, the big fellow who had nearly choked me to death, made a signal toward the window. The man pried it open while he tied a handkerchief about my mouth and flung me roughly upon the bed, springing out of the window after the others.

"It seemed only an instant after they disappeared through the window that my brother-in-law came to the door. He was in his pajamas and carried a revolver. My sister, big-eyed and frightened, followed him. They removed the handkerchief. I laughed and cried and pointed to the window before I fainted. Although my jewel case lay in a corner of the open drawer it was unopened. My screams had driven the robbers away.

"I should know the man anywhere. He is exactly like the portrait. I have had it taken from my room. I hate it. Is the man, do you think, a reincarnation of the bandit of the picture?"

From Moscow by way of London comes a similar story. At two o'clock in the morning M. Lokieff, a Russian official, returning home with his wife from a fete, thought he heard a curious noise in the drawing-room. Cutting sharply the silence of after midnight came the sound as of a chair being pushed roughly out of the way. Lighting a candle he hurried to the large room, but everything seemed to be in its place.

The room echoed only the sound of his heavy footsteps upon the polished floors.

He returned and said the sound was one of imagination. A half hour later when the incident had been completely forgotten, Lokieff went to the drawing-room to bring a jewelled fan she had left upon the table. It was gone from the table.

"Perhaps I laid it somewhere else and have forgotten," she said, and her eyes wandered about the room.

They fell upon the portrait of her grandfather in his uniform as a Uhlan officer. M. Lokieff in their bedchamber heard his wife scream.

"The portrait—it looked at me with real eyes," she whispered. M. Lokieff laughed and led her from the room.

It had been well for M. Lokieff if, like a few prudent husbands, he had been guided by his wife's fears. The next morning he called her to the drawing room to prove to her that her fears had been groundless.

"My dear, you see," he began exultantly.

His wife pointed to two holes where the dark, painted eyes of the Uhlan officer had been.

Mme. Lokieff's fan and many other valuables were missing from the drawing room. The chief had hid behind the portrait and was peeping upon them while the Russian general had assured his wife, upon the logic of a man, that nothing had happened.

The fiction model which these events chose to follow was a strange story told in "The Tales of a Traveller." In the collection of some of Washington Irving's wisest and wittiest stories is that entitled "The Adventure of My Aunt."

During her disrobing, the story relates, she whom the narrator describes merely as my aunt, all of a sudden thought she heard something move behind her. She looked hastily around, but there was nothing to be seen. Nothing but the grimly painted portrait of her poor, dear man, hanging against the wall. She gave a heavy sigh to his memory and went on adjusting her night dress. Her sigh was reanswered or echoed by a long drawn breath. She looked around again, but no one was to be seen. She ascribed these sounds to the wind oozing through the rat holes of the old mansion, and proceeded leisurely to put her hair in papers, when, all at once, she thought she perceived one of the eyes of the portrait move. So strange a circumstance, as you may well suppose, gave her a sudden shock. To assure herself of the fact, she put one hand to her head as though rubbing it; peeped through her fingers and moved the candle with the other hand. The light of the taper gleamed on the eye and was reflected from it. She was sure it moved. It struck a momentary chill to her heart, for she was a lone woman and felt herself fearfully situated.

"The chill was but transient. My aunt became instantly calm and collected. She went on adjusting her dress. She even hummed an air, and did not make even a single false note. She casually overturned a dressing box, took a candle and picked up the articles one by one from the floor, pursued a rolling pincushion that was making the best of its way under the bed, then opened the door, looked for an instant into the corridor as if in doubt whether to go, and then walked quietly out.

"She hastened downstairs, ordered the servants to arm themselves with the weapons first at hand, placed herself at their head and returned almost immediately. Her hastily levied army presented a formidable force. The steward had a rusty blunderbuss, the cook a loaded whip, the footman a pair of horse pistols, the cook a huge chopping knife and the butler a poker in each hand. They entered the chamber. All was still and undisturbed as when she had left it. They approached the portrait of my uncle.

"Pull down that picture," cried my aunt. A heavy groan, and a sound like the chattering of teeth, issued from the portrait. The picture was pulled down, and from a recess behind it, in which had formerly stood a clock, they hauled forth a round shouldered, black-bearded rascal, with a knife as long as my arm. The vagabond was a loose, idle fellow of the neighborhood, who had once been a servant in the house. He confessed that he had contrived this lurking place for his nefarious purposes, and had borrowed an eye from the portrait by way of a reconnoitering hole. I believe he was sent on a voyage of improvement to Botany Bay."

Does the Ideal Lover Make An Ideal Husband.

IN almost every unhappy marriage inquiry would, perhaps, reveal the fact that the woman in her days of courtship allowed her vanity to run away with her head and heart. For, alas, how many girls are deceived by a courteous demeanor allied to good looks, and tender speeches delivered with that expression of repressed passion in which a certain class of wooer is so adept.

The "ideal" lover is a polite gallant. His attentions in the shape of theatre tickets, flowers, and presents, are highly gratifying to the vanity of the girl he is courting, and she counts herself a lucky woman to have enslaved so brilliant a cavalier, who compares very favorably with the dances of any of her friends.

For he lauds her above all women, and his delightful extravagance tickles the ears of his lady love almost as much as his own. That he could ever be different never enters the head of the girl he is wooing. How could such a thing be possible? She scoffs indignantly, when some candid friend hints that she hopes George will not turn out like a brilliant Spring morning, dull and overcast soon.

Yet, and to tell, before the honeymoon has waned George's little attentions are accompanied with a shade of ennui. His reminiscence in small matters creeps imperceptibly into the picture, and instead of, as in the courting days, anticipating the lady love's wishes before they are uttered, now he has to be spoken to more than once before he even hears.

The man who, a few months ago, declared that old bachelors and clubs ought to be abolished, now dines at the club with a zest he never brings home from business. The hands he once declared should never lift anything heavier than a teacup may now perform heroic labor at the bath tub for all he notices.

Not that he is cruel. He is merely indifferent. Now that he has gained a woman upon whom he pinned his feeble fancy he is satisfied that there is nothing more desired of him, and he turns his fascinating manners and Adonis-like features in another direction.

And so long as his wife is prepared to meekly put up with this incomprehensible reversal the married state she once found so pleasing by picks the world hears little about her pale a.

Maître Crupp's Statement of the Indignities Suffered by Countess Anna Gould Castellane

LIFE offers great contrasts. Novelists know this, but judges know it better still.

On the 13th of December, 1905—that is to say, less than a year ago—great excitement reigned in the Avenue Malakoff. Mme. de Castellane was about to receive one of the sovereigns of Europe, the King of Portugal, in a palace worthy in splendor and magnificence to harbor so distinguished a guest.

Next day Mme. de Castellane called upon her attorneys, and, with that sad, reserved air which distinguishes her, recounted to them the story of her sufferings, and expressed her firm determination to separate from her husband.

When, on the 17th of February, 1906, Mme. de Castellane decided to sue for a separation, which, the Court will remember, was transformed into one for divorce, she did not act upon the suggestions of her friends, nor upon the impulse of sentiment prompted by exaggerated jealousy. Such a condition of mind might have left some hope for a reconciliation or the return of a weakness which had caused her to endure so long. She acted, on the contrary, after long and serious consideration, with the calm firmness of an absolute decision, arrived at in the midst of great sorrow.

It seemed to her that the interests of her three children, what she owed to her own self-respect, her natural frankness of character (which our Gallic-gabbed adversaries are wrong to ridicule) and her wounded spirit exacted of her that she should at last turn her back upon the atmosphere of deception, lowered devotion and a life of lies and ruin among which she had been living.

Mme. de Castellane's request, which is now submitted to the Court, is, as will be seen, not made on the impulse of a burst of temper, but the result of a long series of cruel and undeserved trials.

You will see that in the midst of a life, to all appearances of the greatest brilliancy, Madame the Countess de Castellane experienced great sorrow and fearful humiliation.

Too serious by nature, too profoundly honorable to seek distraction from her sorrows in the dissipations surrounding a life of magnificence, far too sensible—by the Court to believe mere—to conspicuously ignore her husband's indiscretions, too good and too scrupulous to punish them without delay, Mme. de Castellane would not act until she knew all there was to know, and verified her suspicions and carried to the extremest limit the strength of her patience.

The principal trait in the character of my client, Mme. de Castellane, a trait which M. de Castellane, notwithstanding his extreme cleverness, has not sufficiently appreciated, is her hatred of lies. Her natural candidly exposed this young orphan, inexperienced as she was, and finding herself thrown suddenly in the whirlpool of an aristocratic society, to the bitterest deceptions.

What I have said suffices to describe Mme. de Castellane's character. The sterling qualities which inspire our respect I shall enlarge upon later.

She was but twenty years old when, on the 15th of March, 1895, she was married to M. René de Castellane in New York. She was the fifth child by marriage between Jay Gould and Helen D. Miller. There were six children, of whom the eldest was Mr. George Gould. I beg the Court to pay particular attention to this name, as I shall have occasion to use it frequently in the course of the arguments which will arise during the hearing of the suit which the creditors are bringing against us. Mr. Joseph Gould, all the world knows, is one of the railroad kings of America. He is energetic, hard-working and respected by his competitors.

Miss Helen Gould, eldest sister of the Countess de Castellane, is distinguished by her high qualities of heart and mind. She also plays an important role in this affair: she is not married. She has a sincere contempt for a life of luxury, lives simply and devotes her time exclusively to charity.

Anna Gould, orphaned at seventeen, had a serious, I might almost say melancholy, childhood. You'll say that the first hours of her married life were for her, moments of enchantment. With his historic name, his personal charms, his elegance and taste, the Count de Castellane introduced his young wife to aristocratic society with a grace which was thoroughly bewitching. He revealed the Countess a beautiful and charming kingdom, over which she should reign surrounded by the homage of princes, reconciled by sovereigns and enthroned in the magnificence of art and luxury which M. René de Castellane knew so well how to find.

What She Most Cared For Was Affection.

Far from being indifferent to all this, Mme. de Castellane fully appreciated it, but she saw in the life which she was about to start upon a means of blessing her young husband, of indulging his taste and spoiling him. At least I insist upon it, and all who know Mme. de Castellane will bear me out, she did not care much for this splendid setting of so grand a life. What she most cared for was true friendship and what she would have prized above all other things, would have been a married life founded upon true affection and sincerity.

For the present I will pass by the details of differences on financial matters which almost immediately disturbed the tranquility of the young couple and proceed to those acts of brutality on the part of Count de Castellane, mainly on account of which this action is based.

Immediately after his marriage the Count de Castellane bought, for enormous sums, pieces of furniture which he sold again immediately. These operations having caused the appellant to comment thereon, the Count de Castellane grossly insulted her in the presence of the servants. The maid often saw the Countess in tears after scenes which her husband made about money matters.

One day, as she was dressing, M. de Castellane entered the room and insisted upon her signing a paper, which she refused to do. In a furious temper, the Count brutally pushed her toward the door. A few moments later the Countess returned to her room weeping and said to her maid that she was very ill. The maid's statement continues:

"At the slightest pretext, M. le Count de Castellane made scenes and went so far as to strike the appellant. In the course of one of these scenes Countess de Castellane was brutally pinched on the arm by her husband, and as she was still suffering from the bruise the next day, she revealed the fact to an American friend who was stopping at the chateau."

This act of brutality will be supported by the testimony, if need be, of a witness of the highest standing; not a witness of the actual scene, but of the suffering, moral and physical, which it had caused Mme. de Castellane.

For that matter, gentlemen, it must be confessed that Mme. de Castellane during the eleven years of her married life—you will be able to judge by this what wonderful and loyal enduring patience she has of no importance, at a dinner, I believe, which had been shown—has often been struck and had her ears boxed given at the tower by an American woman and to by her husband. She now confesses to these moments which he had not been invited. On the way home its of suffering which for years she has hidden from the the carriage, he boxed his wife's ears. world, and all who are able to understand her great patience and her reserve will understand how terrible it must be to her to have to make this painful confession.

I have here, on the subject of these revelations, the testimony of a person whose loyalty and high standing cannot be disputed. I refer to Mrs. Millington Drake, wife of the former President of the British Chamber of Commerce. She wrote Mme. de Castellane the following letter which I have felt that I could read before the court and which I have already communicated to my honorable opponent, which you will now have the charge of appreciating:

"My Dear Anna:

"I am, as you know, opposed to divorce and even to all separation of property. I have, therefore, always urged you to be patient, though I know you have had just reason to complain of your husband. But since, notwithstanding my advice, you have decided to ask for a divorce, and since your decision is irrevocable, I do not feel that I have any right to refuse to confirm the numerous confidences which you have made to me during your married life.

"It is true that upon many occasions, and even when you had been married barely three months, you came to me and complained of the brutality of your husband, and the blows which your husband has been guilty of giving you—in a word, you explained to me that the only price at which you could buy peace was to deliver to your husband your entire income, which, as I know, you did. While regretting the conditions under which I find myself obliged to write this letter, I nevertheless renew to you, dear Anna, the expression of my affectionate sympathy.

(Signed) "HELENE MILLINGTON DRAKE."

I do not insist upon the moral significance of this document, but I draw this fact that judging by the Countess's confidences, her husband's brutality followed almost inevitably upon differences on the question of money. Not always, however; there were questions of pride, of touchiness, mere feelings, stupid pretexts which gave rise to the husband's brutalities.

Thus it was that four months after their marriage, M. and Mme. de Castellane, having gone, on the 14th of July, a national holiday, to the Eiffel Tower, the Count showed considerable temper about an incident

It was on the eve of the general elections of Castellane, who had, particularly at that time, good reasons for not offending his wife, did his best to clear away the suspicions which this flirtation had aroused and to overcome the coldness which had sprung up between them as a consequence thereof. I possess on this subject several letters which I need not produce here, but which are well known to M. de Castellane.

When the elections were over there was less need for reserve. After a sojourn in the south of France, which had not exactly pleased Mme. de Castellane, a journey in company with Mme. A. was planned and carried out. In the interval one might think that the flirtation had taken or rather resumed, an extremely tender turn, for one fine evening Mme. de Castellane caught her husband writing to the lady:

"You alone are what I need."

The Countess imprudently leaned over her husband's shoulders to see more clearly what he was writing, and received a box on the ears; it was not the first.

Nevertheless the trip with Mme. A. was taken, and the Countess one day—I know where, although I do not say—acquired the undeniable proof that her suspicions were justified.

One morning the Countess went to her husband's bedroom. She called to him; no answer.

"He sleeps soundly," she thought, and approached the bed, where a motionless figure was stretched.

It was a dummy—a manikin—under the covers, with its head, carefully made up to resemble the Count, on the pillow.

As the Countess left the bedchamber she met her husband coming from the room where slept one of their guests, a married woman, who bears a noble and a historic name—she was Mme. A.

The Countess Finds His Love Letters.

Soon afterward the Countess found another letter, signed by this same woman. She found it in an unlocked writing desk in the Castellane château. It ran:

"I must see thee in our nest. Five days have passed since that happy Wednesday, and no word from thee. But I know, I am certain, this is against thy will.

"What joy to be in our little home in Paris again, to pass sweet, exquisite moments together. My one desire is to render thee happy. I wish thee to be my only 'Some One,' and thou are willing to be. But tell me thou art happy; tell me that all my doubts are but a horrid nightmare.

"Thou art my only friend. Write me, my dear friend, to console me: I burn thy letters quickly. I love thee, I love thee."

After such an incident how could there be any further room for doubt? Well—and this is a point which characterizes the unfortunate Mme. de Castellane, so cruelly used—she wished to doubt, notwithstanding the evidence. One can guess her anxiety, the agony of a horrible doubt in the letter of that same month of September, 1908, which was communicated to me yesterday, and for which I thank him, by my honorable opponent. It was written from Biarritz by Mme. de Castellane to her husband. She said:

"Be good. God bless you, for you have great need of Him; so have I. Love, tenderness."

Alas, other facts were to bring to Mme. de Castellane the certainty, or rather the confirmation, of a grief which the continuation of life in common could not make her forget, and which have their bearing upon the judicial side of the question.

In the month of November, 1908, Mme. de Castellane was alone at the château of R——. One evening, feeling somewhat nervous at being alone, she took her jewels, with the intention of placing them in safety, in a casket to which there were two keys. One of these keys was in the possession of the Count; the Countess had the other, but she had never used it.

She opened the casket, and the first thing she found were the letters which I am about to read. These letters relate to the charge which I placed before the Court some moments ago. The Countess was perfectly familiar with the handwriting of these letters, and it was impossible for her to make any mistake as to the identity of the person who had written them to her husband.

Greatly upset, suffering acutely from this discovery, which she could not have foreseen, the Countess gathered up the compromising package and wrote at once to one of her American lawyers, Mr. Cachard, begging him to come at once to R—— or to send one of his associates.

Mr. P——, an employe of Mr. Cachard, went to R—— and received from the hands of the Countess the sealed package of letters, for which he gave a receipt, which I have communicated to my honorable opponent. This took place in the month of November, 1908. That these letters, which the Count will shortly hear, were addressed de Castellane; that they came from Mme their formula in the text and on the en indications which have been carefully can be no doubt.

I say to my honorable Interlocuter suppose he will raise any discussion on that he will not oblige me to develop details with regard to the dates, the pl itself and the destination of the letter these documents before the Court, wh cidate their exactitude.

The letters of Mme. A., which are sion, were written within a period of is to say, between the 16th and 24th 1908. The first runs as follows:

This tells me it is Mme. X. who is r we quite understand each other as to that we have decided to make use of on the other.

ographic Report of the Countess Anna Gould Castel- it in the French Court, Revealing New and Almost Lights on the Worthless Husband Who Frittered Slapped Her Face, Flirted With Women Who Him and Then Begged to be Forgiven.

ON these pages is printed for the first time in its entirety the most remarkable arraignment of a recreant husband ever placed on record in any court.

It is Maitre Cruppi's masterly analysis of the proofs of Count Boni de Castellane's brutal and almost incredibly disloyal treatment of his wife, Anna Gould de Castellane, during the whole eleven years of their wedded life.

So eloquently also did Maitre Cruppi picture the generosity, the loving kindness and the long-suffering patience of this outraged wife that the Paris court refused to hear witnesses for the defence, and granted to her, who henceforth will be known as Mme. Anna Gould, even more than she had asked.

The utter moral desolation of a home shown in the proofs of Count de Castellane's relations with other woman, makes of Maitre Cruppi's statement an invaluable warning to all American girls whose wealth attracts titled creatures of the Castellane brand.

'The Countess Had to Beg the Count to Give Her a Few Francs."

In 1905 and 1906 M. de Castellane had as partners with Mme. C.

When a master of a home, even the most faithful husband, goes after dinner and a party given at his house to way for a pretty woman in the garden, he can do so; but if the servants know the lady and are kept away, as was the case at the Avenue Malakoff, the fact assumed another aspect and the whispered word only make too much of it. I pass on these words, which my opponent knows the meaning of. In the absence of her husband, and notably why M. C. was away on a journey, Mme. C. received M. de Castellane.

I shall just now bring to your notice a declaration revealing all the details.

Here is the declaration:

"I was occupying housework d to Mme. C. from December, 1900, to the 1st of January, 1903.

"When the Count was there a housemaid kept guard at the door in order to give the alarm when M. C. return

"When M. C. returned one ring at the bell was given as signs. When Mme. C. returned from the theatre she had an hour's notice to do."

M. de Castellane was not satisfied with the successes he had in his own house, he also, and successes of gallantry of which money are ever, pretty, beauty is ... you how it was discovered, for you will see that efforts are being made to falsify our proofs.

Mme. de Castellane, who I think, had a perfect right to do so, opened an old locked drawer one day, of a table standing in the drawing room of Avenue Malakoff, and therein found the letter which I will read to you.

"Mme. de Castellane Caught Her Husband Writing to the Lady: "You Alone Are What I Need."

"Saturday, Hotel Dominici.

"My Dear Boni:

"I will not let Christmas pass without sending you my sincerest wishes that all your hopes may be realised, that you may keep a long while yet all that energy which has made my happiness.

"I know you to be so busy with your preparations that I will not take your time nor your strength, but never for any other will you be what you have been for me, and will I quite forget your friend.

(signed) "LUCE."

During the course of the same year, 1905, M. de Lemis Castellane had relations with a demi-mondaine who lived in a hotel, rue de Castiglione.

Is it necessary, after what I have read, to go into more particulars and more details and

Is not the letter I have just read—Count, we will show your commission? And, then we found this letter in the drawer of a table which stood previously in M. de Castellane's bedroom, we did not know the name of the lady who signs herself "Luce."

M. de Castellane took it upon himself to cease this difficulty and to give us some precise information.

As a matter of fact, it was communicated to me yesterday. It is very interesting. And we can explain ourselves very explicitly on this point, either in pleading or during inquiry; and we can answer you that the disclosure of M. Lemis to a very complete and exact understanding.

By Mrs. Osborn Creator Of Fashions For The Fashionable Women Of America

Satin, Chiffon and Silk Point-d'esprit are the Fashionable Fabrics Now Used on Gowns for the Winter Brides. and the Modified Empire and Princess Lines Are the Smartest and Newest Models.

A—An Exquisite Gown for a Young Bride of Silk Point d'esprit Trimmed With Satin Quillings and Lace

B—A Charming Gown for a Bridesmaid, of Light Yellow Tulle Trimmed With Lace and Tulle Bands and Flowers

C—A Delightful Gown for Bridesmaid, of Chiffon Embellished With Ruchings of the Same Material and Lace

FROM one end of the land to the other fairylike trousseaux are being made ready for the Winter brides.

With the first snow falls and the whitening of the rice upon the stepping stones the Winter bride-elect is taken from a front position in the social world and plunges into a white mist of satins and silks, laces and lingerie.

The princess style of gown, in various modified forms, has always been a favorite as well as most becoming style for wedding gowns. This season the stamp of fashion set particularly upon this type of gown, with it the charming empire gown, both in short and long trains.

Both types of gowns are difficult the empire especially so, but both have the long flowing lines which adapt themselves charmingly to bridal gowns, lending to them a grace and dignity which no other make of gown quite imparts.

While shirrings in skirt lines is sought for a wedding gown many styles of trimmings are in vogue. One may embellish the gown with ruchings put on in plaits, parallel or perpendicular lines, and may use passementeries, hand embroidery, lace, quillings, folds or knife pleatings, according to the material of which the gown is made and the expense attached to it.

Bolero and tunnel effects about the bodice and sleeves are also quite stylish for hand some [illegible] trimmings [illegible] and [illegible] to form a [illegible] gown in empire or princess style. The extremely tall woman, however, to whom the length of line from a short-waisted bodice to the feet is undesirable, may have a wide pleated skirt around the waist with a sash of silk. This gives a [illegible] to the figure and yet [illegible] effect of shortening the figure.

The numerous charming arrangements of pearls and drapes now in vogue give endless outlines for hanging out the best and concealing the worst in every woman's figure so that every bride may have the joy of realizing that she looks her best in her wedding gown.

[illegible] your wedding gowns be worn head and [illegible] but find out what is becoming in a fold or bit of drapery, and introduce that in as fetching a manner as possible. Endeavor always to add some original touch to your gown, so that it may not have the expression of being an exact copy of a dress worn by someone else.

An Exquisite New Model.

The gown shown in figure A is a bewitching example of a wedding dress suitable to a youthful bride. In another material and trimmed differently, it will make a splendid [illegible] for an older girl.

The material is fine silk point d'esprit over a taffeta slip, with chiffon between the outer and under dress. This veiling of chiffon, considered indispensable beneath gowns of net, lace or similar diaphanous meshes, gives a wonderfully soft and girlish expression to the gown.

The fitted slip of white taffeta is finished at the bottom with knife pleatings of the same material. Over this a slip of chiffon ends in a deep flounce of knife pleated gauze edged with baby ribbon. A collarless neck is cut out a little and finished with a lace beading overcast with narrow white satin ribbon. This is the only beading to a round yoke above a gathered piece of tulle. A full ruching of tulle is below this, beneath which begins a full gathered bodice of point d'esprit.

Silk point d'esprit, by the way, is much more pretty and delicate in appearance than those nets made of cotton threads.

Around the bodice is a wide band of filmy lace, [illegible] edged in a bib shape and edged with a full pleated ruffle of tulle. This slopes down the back in a much deeper slant. Puffed sleeves are trimmed with bands of the same lace. The [illegible] to a band of satin folds with [illegible] upward in a point [illegible] this triangle is trimmed with three rosettes of satin having jewelled centres. Below this a fitted cuff of lace terminates each puffed sleeve.

A wide girdle of satin is laid in pleated folds and has a double [illegible] down the front [illegible] folded [illegible] ribbon [illegible] [illegible] of an X, and [illegible] [illegible] in jewelled [illegible].

The skirt of this dainty robe is just the [illegible] sweetest, most girlish thing possible. There is about it something at once ethereal and fairy like that should [illegible] the happiest [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] is indeed, somewhat [illegible] [illegible] altogether [illegible] [illegible] seeming to float up the aisle in this cloud-like garment of frothy white.

The skirt is gathered to the waistband but the material is so soft that its fullness receives itself into clinging lines. Around in the regulation round berths design, but the lower portion four rows of tulle quilling, put on very full so the quilling stands out like edges of a mist, alternate with four wide rows of filmy lace galon, each band of lace being edged with a full, knife-pleated ruffle of tulle, which still further carries out the idea of fringes of mist from a cloud. On the bottom of the gown is a wider ruffle of tulle which forms about the satin-slippered feet of the bride.

A very attractive and quite simply made bridesmaids' dress is shown in figure B. Light yellow tulle is made up over a fitted silk underdress, which is, of course, veiled in chiffon of the same color.

The decolletage of the bodice is in a deep V shape in the back and front. This is bordered by closely pleated tulle held in place by four thick cords of cream-colored satin at intervals apart, forming a deep berthe which nearly covers the full bodice. This berthe is edged with a narrow pleated tulle ruffle over a wider one, the ruffle being formed by the [illegible] of the tulle below the last cord of satin.

Across the V in the bottom of the front is a tucker of glossy pleated tulle crossed by small satin cords, and finished with tiny satin bows in the front. The back of the decolletage is filled in with the same arrangements of tulle and cords except that there are not any bows and only three cords across the smaller tucker there.

A wide girdle of cream-yellow satin is arranged in closely drawn folds. Over the top of it hangs the tulle edge and yellow rose decorations of the berths. This is not a fitted girdle, but is [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

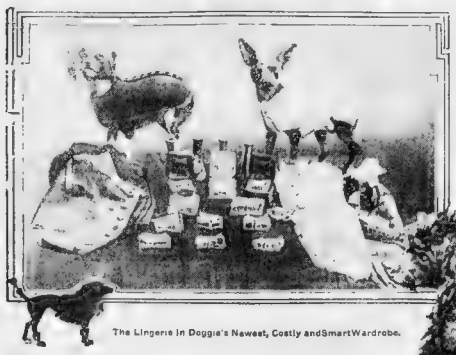
The Very Latest Paris Modes for Dogs.



The Lingerie in Doggie's Newest, Costly and Smart Wardrobe.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—It would seem to be next to impossible to exaggerate the wild extravagance of women of wealth in the matter of their pet dogs. There are fashions in them, just as in hats or frocks, and at one time a couple of thousand may be paid for a King Charles spaniel, a pug or a curly poodle, whereas these took a back seat when Queen Victoria brought forward the Pomeranian.

[illegible] turn over to Japanese and Yokohama spaniels, and so it goes. The high priests of "dandy doghood" in naughty Paris, whence come all things modish, and a dealer like Savry in the Rue de Pétrelle, or Aaron, of the Dog's Palace, in the Champs Elysées, will think nothing of asking [illegible] for a little Brabançon—a cross between a griffon and a bull terrier, with the way [illegible] head to a new Pekingese and a pair of rare white Pomeranians—anything only three months old, and [illegible] was $500.

[illegible] dogs for driving, for mounting, for resting in the park for carrying in the muff (both [illegible] dresses, to whom [illegible] are at all, no sooner [illegible] little cur is [illegible] with one another in [illegible] the use of [illegible] a wardrobe of [illegible] which have to be seen to be believed.

A house like that of Ledouble in the Palais Royale, or Barrett's in Piccadilly, is a sight to see with their coats for dogs of [illegible], and chinchilla, dogs' boots of [illegible] rubber, drawing room baskets lined [illegible] with [illegible] edged with fine lace to go into [illegible] little pockets in the coats and, last of all, a gorgeous array of gold and silver collars and couplers, many of them set with [illegible], diamonds, rubies and turquoises, not to mention brace ets, card cases for [illegible], on each and a hundred other [illegible] being displayed [illegible] and modern [illegible] grooming in cases over [illegible] the [illegible] of chrome dogs.

Surely the "limit" was reached when Messrs. Barrett received an order for a special kind of umbrella for a [illegible] bit [illegible] which [illegible] from [illegible] that. The [illegible] was duly [illegible] and arranged so that it could be strapped around the fat body of the [illegible], though it is only fair to say that his subsequent objections to the protection were so pronounced that after a few turns in the Park his [illegible] was obliged to do away with the umbrella and write her pet down as a very ungrateful dog indeed.

To see the dog tailors at work is an interesting if mournful sight, having regard to the amount of human suffering in the world. Here you will see nimble fingers at work upon a coat of stiff figured brocade—as well a dress you are gravely told—and here is the wreath of cerise blossoms for the nuptial bid is to attend a wedding next month and he must be en suite as to his costume with the gorgeous gown of his mistress.

There are mourning robes edged with silk crape, jaunty yachting costumes embroidered with the pack's name, travelling coats with a pocket for the railway ticket, and another for a dainty biscuit or other refreshment en route.

There are silken negligees with frills of chiffon, and little bunches of flowers placed with [illegible] mate art among the ruffs around the neck.

You are shown waterproofs and khaki for wet and muddy weather, and rich velvet coats for Wintry days, with huge upstanding storm collars lined and edged with ermine and mink. For the smaller toy terriers—Blenheims, Yorkshires, foxes and bulls—there are exquisitely cut costumes of fawn cloth lined with pale blue satin, and decorated with golden buttons inlaid with turquoise.

There are golden and jewelled bells for the collars, and belt buckles of Neapolitan filigree work set with brilliants. Jewelled dog collars in this establishment run up to $1,000, and there are besides little brassards, always in pliable gold so as not to [illegible] the dog legs, lockets and necklaces, too, and regular little canine travelling trunks packed with dog dressing gowns, a change of boots, with handkerchiefs and jewelry.

Naturally these gorgeous pets have special men servants to look after them. They have their daily tub in warm water, are washed with costly scented soaps, dried with soft warmed towels, and finally brushed, combed and duly scented with the finest perfume that Grasse produces, and which happens to be the favorite of their mistress.

In Summer time there are public bathing places for dogs along the Seine, and here the Dandy Dog is led by his attendant footman, by jewelled leash, that he may be bathed, combed, clipped and even curled according to the prevailing mode. His mistress's crest is frequently left in tufts of hair upon his pampered body.

Resting places and beds are on the same fantastic scale. Sometimes wicker work is wrought into a miniature Summer house or Oriental pavilion, lined and draped with quilted satin, while thick soft satin cushions are disposed within. Should he fail ill there are special canine vets. whose fees would make any ordinary family physician gasp.

A man like Alfred Sewell, of Belgravia, London, asks and obtains $500 for a minor operation on a pet dog; while the ordinary "treatment," for which he charges on a similar scale, may consist in bribing the pampered pet into an empty room with a plebeian bone and a dish of water, there to remain for two or three days without other nutriment.

Overfeeding is, of course, a fruitful source of trouble among these unfortunate little animals. Did space permit, almost incredible stories could be related about breasts of pheasants, dishes of sweetbreads [illegible] and [illegible] chefs at the like.

The Most Costly Funeral Urn Ever Designed for the Ashes of a Cremated Dog. It is Simply Ablaze With Precious Stones and Cost $3,150.

taken on silver salvers by powdered footmen to ailing dogs.

Should the patient die, his funeral and monument may easily cost more than would keep several deserving families for a whole year. Barrett's in London were once astounded to receive an order from a countess for a cinerary urn on a lavish scale to hold the ashes of a cremated pet named "Monkey." It was in the form of a golden sedan chair with the figure of a monkey on the top in solid gold, holding a pearl in his paw. The handles of the chair were enamelled with brilliants and the total cost was $3,000.

Another magnificent memorial to a pet was to be seen in the Necropolis Zoological, in Paris. It is the work of a sculptor almost as eminent as Hodin Idmand the Maison Ledouble there is also simple feats, has been sold to Mr. Leopold de Rothschild for $500, whose custom it is to present trained white French poodles to his women friends on birthdays, wedding anniversaries and other occasions.

One is amazed to find how many establishments there are in London [illegible] and other centres for dog robes at twelve guineas each. Besides Barrett's and the Maison Ledouble there is also [illegible] Dorléans, of No. 229 Rue St.

How to Cook a Thanksgiving Turkey in Creole Style.

THE epicures of Thanksgiving Day pate full of flesh crumbed stale bread browned, the nuts beaten to meat, to a keeper to pass over cookery books with no crusts in it, soaked, but not very great extent, and the gravy into turkey in the best way, one manner pulled wet, with oyster juice. Let all brown the turkey and the flavor of the fowl into the end is to roast the Thanksgiving together. The mass will become a clear dish brown if stirred, but the most delicate attention will [illegible] the flavor of the whole.

When this is brown pour in the oyster juice slowly, but do not add more than the bread will absorb; stir for a few minutes and then pour in the nuts and oysters and stir all the mess is thick and hearty. This process will only take a few minutes as the hot lard does its work quickly, and the nuts should not be thrown in until just before the stuffing is ready to pour out of the pot upon a dish. The oysters and nuts are not intended to cook, merely to mix with the stuffing long enough for their flavor to permeate everything. In the dish add a little chopped parsley, a tiny bit of thyme and a taste of bay leaf if you have it. Salt and pepper are added to the stuffing when it is in the pot and to the outside of the turkey when it is greased and set in the oven.

When the stuffing has cooled sufficiently fill the turkey as full as you can. It is not considered artistic to make dressing as soft as that in this recipe, since most cooks sacrifice the flavor of both dressing and fowl to their desire to have the turkey with a puff shirt front. The dressing, when put into the turkey, is of a fair consistency but, after the turkey has been served, the [illegible] and [illegible] and Sunday American-Journal-Examiner Pattern, No. 274.

A Simple and Attractive Little Dress That Can Easily Be Made at Home.

THIS little one-piece dress is one of the daintiest and prettiest among the many new designs shown this season for little girls. The pattern is simplicity itself, the sleeves and dress being all in one piece. The neck is cut square and is large enough to be slipped on easily over the head. Blue and green checked suiting is represented in the illustration, but cashmere, albatross, poncee, delaine, pique and gingham are all appropriate.

The guimpe is made of white nainsook, trimmed with fancy tucking and embroidery. The neck is finished by a standing collar, and the fulness at the waistline is adjusted by a draw string in a casing. For a child of eight years two yards of material 36 inches wide will be required for the dress and 1¼ yards for the guimpe.

The patterns for this child's one-piece dress and guimpe have been cut to sizes for 2, 6, 7 and 8 years, and will be sent postpaid by return mail for 10 cents. Fill in the blank below and mail with 10 cents in silver or stamps to

CHAPTER XXXVI

I WAS going to school every morning those days, but pa thought I ought to go to a training school in the afternoon and learn a trade. He said he thought every boy should know a trade or two, even though he never used it. Pa thinks we should know as much as we can, and by learning a trade a man can have more sympathy for the man who toils. Not that the man who toils needs sympathy. Pa says that's just what he doesn't need. He only needs plenty of steady work.

Well, I didn't know what trade to learn. I remembered the blind carpenter who picked up a hatchet and saw. Pa said that joke was dead twenty years before I was born—it ought to have been.

I didn't want to be a blacksmith. It makes too much noise, and besides Tige doesn't like the sparks. I thought I'd like to be a carpenter I like all those pretty shavings they make with the plane

We Have Wealth, Too Much of It, and Too Suddenly Acquired, Perhaps. But There Is Something More Powerful, More Permanent in This Country's Success Than Money. Money Is the Mere Result, Not the CAUSE OR THE OBJECT OF OUR NATIONAL LABORS

THE DOLLARS are MILESTONES, they are ALSO THE LIFE PRESERVERS

No, this is the country of modern ideals. It is the country of organization. It is the country in which we are passing from the stage of brutal competition to that of efficient co-operation. It is the country in which, if men are to be successful, as and I soon, must learn from their gentle, cold sister to be orderly and logical.

It isn't so. In our daily lives we are all in fear of drowning. We are all in fear of the future. We are all uncertain, anxious. And those dollars, heavy as they are, are the life preservers that will keep us above the waves of peril.

DRAMA

Local Theatricals in Full Swing

HAS Boston gone Belasco mad? It seems so, if one may judge from the long line of ticket-seekers at the Majestic. Rarely in theatrical history does one man have three plays consecutively at one theatre, which create such a furore as did "The Music Master," "The Rose of the Rancho," and as "The Girl of the Golden West" gives every evidence of doing, the decision to be congratulated on his wisdom in deciding to have his premieres here, and Bostonians are to be congratulated upon the opportunity thus given them to witness, at first hand, the work of this veritable master of scenic and dramatic production.

Those persons who will not go to a "stock company theatre" merely because seats can be purchased for half a dollar or so and who think, as a consequence, that the acting must be cheap and faulty, have had an excellent lesson taught them by Mr Belasco the past two weeks. He has chosen as his newest star a little woman who, only two years ago, was playing ingenue roles at the Castle Square theatre here. When one stops to think that with hardly an exception, every one of the prominent actors and actresses of the present day have, and many only recently, been connected with stock companies, it can be seen that these stock houses contain wonderfully strong material.

It is a veritable blessing to the "common people" to be able to witness the very best and strongest plays in these stock theatres at a price within a poor person's means. In many cases the scenery and such houses is much prettier, much better and more true to the times than in the road companies presenting the same play, but people have got into the habit of thinking that because a thing is cheap it can't be good.

Lew Bracken and Augustus Thomas divide honors this week for the new productions here. The former's "Girl of the Golden West" begins a brief engagement at the Majestic, and Mr. Thomas's newest comedy, written for Lawrence D'Orsay, begins a week at "The Embassy Ball" comes to the Park. All the stock companies present new bills, and at the Grand Opera House comes a stirring play of Chinese plottings, called "A Marked Woman." A better idea of the details of the new productions can be gained by the following:

Majestic Theatre

As Minnie Smith, "the girl," in "The Girl of the Golden West," David Belasco's wonderfully successful drama of California in the days of '49, Miss Blanche Bates begins her engagement at the Majestic Theatre this evening. Miss Bates and the play will remain here two weeks with matinees on Saturday and a special performance Thanksgiving afternoon. That Miss Bates would score a great personal success in "The Girl of the Golden West" was in no sense a matter of doubt, since it is the greatest of her career. When Miss Bates first appeared as Cigarette in "Under Two Flags," and as Susan in "The Darling of the Gods," she revealed an idea of the real depth of her impression she has created is easily gained. The character is totally unlike any in which she has hereto-fore been seen, and it is her to perfection. It was written especially for her by Mr Belasco. "The Girl" is the heroine of a mining camp in the Sierra Nevadas, and her presence exerts a peculiar influence upon the career of the little community. She sings and rounds the chief saloon of the settlement in Belasco himself is responsible for the characters of strength and prominence only inferior to that of "The Girl" are Jack Rance, the sheriff, and Ramerrez, alias Dick Johnson, the road agent, and their battle for the love of the girl, the cook's weapons being the strength and effrontery that have elevated him to a position of power, and the girl's purity and power over a rough and ready community, the other, unconscious by his record of crime, possesses an almost irresistible fascination for "the girl" herself. Belasco, the wizard, has made the play at once romantic, absorbing and strong. The stage production is according to the Belasco standard with which persons of Boston are by this time familiar. The settings are historically and geographically correct. Miss Bates' supporting company is one of unusual strength.

Park Theatre

No better assurance of the worth of a stage piece could be given than that it is a comedy by Augustus Thomas. From Arizona to his great success, "The Earl of Pawtucket," in which Lawrence D'Orsay will open at the Park Monday night for a two weeks' run, Mr. Thomas has scored a success of successes. In "The Embassy Ball" Mr. Thomas is said to have produced a comedy of exceptional merit, in theme and rare smartness of speech. The piece was written with Lawrence D'Orsay in mind, and the first few many of its incidents are actual occurrences taken out of his own life history. Mr. D'Orsay is said to be at his best in the part, it is said as no other has been in the entire career of this popular comedian. It is said that Mr. D'Orsay's success in "The Earl of Pawtucket" was the principal reason which led to determine just which particular musical number the audiences have enjoyed the most. Beginning with Miss Dunbar the song, "Hello in the Morning," in the first act, to the quaint song, "Come to the Bourgeois," in which Miss Christie MacDonald, Miss Irene Bentley, Jack Beasley, Wheeler and Jack Gardner participate at the end of the act, and Miss Bentley's humorous song, "And the Weeping Willow Wept" in the second act, all have been received again and again and most of them are now being whistled and sung by the student body of [illegible]

Keith's Theatre

Holiday week demands shows of a different type from other weeks. The programs must be of a lighter character with a comedy and dancing predominating, for these are the acts the children like, and every week with a holiday in it is "children's week" at Keith's. The comedy acts on the bill next week will be Clyde Sherman, De Forrest and company's new travesty on "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," a funny affair with a locking suit as the chief characters; Willis Sutherland and company in "Limberg Furnished Flat," the mother and child sketch by Lee Sam, the monologist; Berke and Dunn, in parodies, and Will and Kelly, the [illegible] Among the "eight acts" may be mentioned Zeno and Love, the trained animal feats in dancing [illegible] Empress equilibrists; Rio and Dolly, bears, in novel tricks, and Claude Golden and his trained goat. John The Original Mythal Five, Instrumentalists. Hoey and Hill, [illegible] Edgar and Leander, singers and dancers; Walter Baptiste, character impersonator; Alice Stevens, in various styles of singing, and new pictures of the Kinetograph will complete the bill.

Orpheum Theatre

One of the novelties at the Orpheum this week is the first appearance here of Princess Estelle de Broglie, of San Francisco, a girl who's domestic affairs have been so widely discussed on both sides of the Atlantic since her return to America a few months ago. While residing in Paris she married a young Prussian, but the match turned out unfortunately and she eloped with the Prince de Broglie and subsequently married to him. After a dissolving their former bonds in New York, by which the Princess has been given custody of great merit and by the terms of the contract the Prince will direct the orchestra in the accompaniments to his wife's songs. Among the other engagements for the week are the great Lafayette in his new [illegible] "Peter Pan," "The Doctor of Medicine Man," and "The Satyr and his Band," with imitations of the great musical conductors; Thomas J. Ryan, Mary Lloyd Field and company in "Miss Haggerty's Reception," The Sisters Rappo, Russian dancers; Ed Latelle musical comedian; Charles Kenna, the Pekin Mimics and Prouty, Lipton comedians, and Sadi Alfetti, the European equilibrist.

Boston Theatre

"His Honor the Mayor," long heralded as the "greatest musical comedy since [illegible]" is the title which is said best show that has visited Broadway in years, and which will be the attraction at the Boston theatre next week. It is a typical original dress, with the original cast, and local amusement lovers of the Boston theatre gave it hearty welcome and the heartiest kind of commendation. It is all that has been claimed for it, both in point of music, comedy and [illegible] It is free and [illegible] from start to finish that a theatre-goer of its extraordinary popularity here or elsewhere. It treats with novelties in cadiant with pretty girls, has a chorus of exceptional musical ability, and among those who the art seems a veritable pleasure, Dockstader's Minstrels, Harry Kelly, the boy of Beacon Flood who is side-splitting comic, only a trifle less humorous, however, is his rustic side partner, the one and only Dockstader a particularly pertinent [illegible] by Miss Madelyn Marshall. The two together make a "team" that would force laughter from a graven image. Other favorites in the cast, not omitting the dainty sextette of dancers, the "English Rose" Lucy Clarence Harry, Nella Webb, Fletcher Norton, John H. Pratt, Harry Stuart, Frederic Van Rensselaer, Kathryn Tanner, James Murray and Marian Alexander. There will be a special [illegible] giving Day matinee this, the last week of the engagement.

Colonial Theatre

Of the musical collation, served in twenty-four courses at every performance of "The Belle of Mayfair" at the Colonial Theatre, it would be a hard matter to [illegible] times and the very atmosphere of charm and elegance which it possesses, has soared to [illegible] heights. It has been on [illegible] in addition to the [illegible] work there will be an extra matinee Thanksgiving Day.

Hollis Street Theatre

Last opportunities ever to see Maude Adams play "Peter Pan" will begin Monday night, when the final three weeks of the Boston engagement are ushered in at the Hollis Street Theatre. It has been found impossible to extend the engagement in this city from the fact that Miss Adams is booked to succeed John Drew at the Empire Theatre, New York and that on [illegible] a tour over the country as far west as San Francisco James M. Barrie has already delivered to Charles Frohman the play for Miss Adams' use next season. Hence the coming three weeks will comprise all her Boston farewell appearances as "The Boy Who Would Not Grow Up." "Peter Pan" will be given in only three other New England cities—Portland, Worcester and Springfield. The company then returns directly to New York and premiers the engagement at the Empire Theatre which was broken off for the present Boston performances. "Peter Pan" will be performed at the Hollis Street Theatre during the coming week on every evening promptly at 8, and on Wednesday, Thursday (Thanksgiving Day), Friday and Saturday matinees at 2 o'clock.

Tremont Theatre

There are only three more weeks in which Henry W. Savage's splendid company will be seen in George Ade's successful comedy success at the Tremont. Ade's bright lines were never better rendered, and his splendid company here are presented with so much faithfulness that one has to be a visitor to a play [illegible] the exuberance of youth which is the dominant note of the [illegible] would be [illegible] to criticise. Max Bachmann's Ideas of "His Honor the Mayor"

Famous Sculptor Sees Harry Kelly at Boston Theatre; Makes Plaster Bust in Dressing Room.

"Deacon Flood," as He Looked to Sculptor Max Bachmann.

By Max Bachmann.

"His Honor the Mayor" at the Boston Theatre. Every Mayor is more or less honorable—more less. Don't take it to heart unless you think the Mayor of your town resembles Harry Kelly. Then you should feel insulted after you have seen Kelly's clever impersonation of Deacon Flood.

But anyway, I'll speak about things as I saw them. I don't know Lew Dockstader's Minstrels, but I'll bet they are funny.

Kelly makes Deacon Flood a "Will Rogers" character, and that is the secret of the success of the play.

I will not be surprised if the party who was responsible for Will Rogers' success in the Ziegfeld Follies, or even Kelly himself, will not be responsible for a number of successful productions.

Kelly has not yet been proposed to when I left the theatre, but I suggest that he take his time. If he trades his self-respect for a bachelor apartment he should get a better deal.

There was a good deal of talk, I can't help it, but most people like to talk during three acts. The play is not a musical comedy, but it is a play with music in it. Almost every song is funny. The chorus have good voices and look pretty. The costumes are rich and in quality and quantity make one think of Modjeska and Mansfield days. Julian Edwards and Al Lewis are responsible for the music. Lewis is a comedian of the first water. Edwards is a composer of the highest order. Both of them are there to please.

It is useless to quarrel with any one on that for the days of Lew Dockstader's Minstrels, Primrose & Dockstader's Minstrels, Primrose & West, Cohan & Harris Minstrels, Al G. Field's Minstrels, Rice & Barton's Minstrels, Haverly's Minstrels, Callendar's Minstrels, Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels, Lew Dockstader's

Berlin, Nov. 24.—Pepito Arriola, called the "Return of Mozart" is considered the most marvelous musician in Europe, and Professor Arthur Nikisch, formerly conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who discovered him, says "the child is a veritable genius."

Pepito is but nine years old. His playing is causing a sensation wherever it has been heard. His hands are so small that a special piano with a narrow keyboard has been constructed for him.

In order to develop his gifts to the utmost, he will not be allowed to play in public except at rare intervals, and then only [illegible] being kept at study many hours a day at home, encouraged to play with boys of his age. It is hoped by world musicians that his precocity will bud into a maturity of genius which will make him one of the greatest music masters that ever lived.

Mozart was one of the most precocious of the composers, and Pepito has many characteristics in playing an temperament which suggest a comparison.

Prince Olaf of Norway, Heir to Throne, Idolized by Father's Loyal Subjects — Princess Marina of Russia a Linguist

Lady Mary Alva Montagu, Whose Mother Was an American, and but 5 Years Old, Pet of Queen of England

Special Cable to the Boston Sunday American.

London, Nov. 24.—Of the three most interesting children in royal circles little Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, Princess Marina of Russia and Lady Mary Alva Montagu, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, they appeal to public attention in different ways. Little Prince Olaf because of his transcendent importance to Norway, which it is said that the mere fact that he is alive is worth more to support of the throne than 100,000 soldiers. The Norwegians look upon him as the guarantee of the stability of the Independence they obtained by peaceful separation from Sweden.

The Princess Marina [illegible] the granddaughter of Queen Victoria, and [illegible] in such a remarkable clever scholar that is said she already surpasses [illegible] in the knowledge of languages. [illegible] speaks English, French, German and Russian with equal fluency, and is known as a most [illegible] child. [illegible] Lady Mary Alva Montagu, the daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, is [illegible] and has been [illegible] since she was a baby. Being [illegible] she appeal to public attention.

Lady Mary Alva Montagu, five years old, is half American. Her mother was Miss [illegible] and [illegible] Montagu. [illegible] Lady Mary Alva Montagu is [illegible] Queen Victoria. [illegible] Lady Mary Alva Montagu [illegible] Duke of Manchester

Can You Use Food When You Get It?

Thousands of Stomachs Starving Where Mouths Are Well Fed. Costs Nothing To Relieve This Condition.

Eating is fast becoming too much a part of the daily routine, but a mere tickling of the appetite—a thing to be gotten out of the way as quickly as possible. Little thought is given to "what kind of food." Its effect upon the system, and whether it will be of use in building up the tissues of the body.

Your stomach will revolt, if it is not already doing so. It must shut up for repairs. What of the dizziness, and sometimes pain, which stop you after a hurried lunch? What of the general distress after a heavy dinner, a feeling of pressure at the heart which calls a halt at, makes the breathing difficult? Is it common for you to be oppressed with belching and sour eructations? Are you constipated and then do you laughingly toss a dime to the druggist for his most palatable relief? Beware of the temporary cures that are but palliatives. Many antidotes for the common ills which our flesh is heir to seem to relieve, but in reality, if not injecting poison into the system, lay the foundation for a deeper-seated and more far-reaching disorder.

Three-fourths of all diseases originate with a breaking down of the digestion and nine-tenths of all digestive troubles originate with one or more of the symptoms named above.

Beware, then, of Indigestion and Dyspepsia. If you find yourself aching, listless, lacking in ambition when you should be on the alert,

Do not doctor the stomach.

It needs a rest from food and drink.

Do not flush out the bowels.

It takes more than forcing food through the passageway to make blood and tissue and nerve.

Do not starve your stomach.

Feed it nothing to be worked for. Put it in the right condition towards ... the work if you will help it. Nature's Way

THANKSGIVING

To Those Who Are Not Charge Customers
[illegible]

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday—Thursday we give thanks. Many will remember the unusual values and the exceptional quality received at our first Thanksgiving sale a year ago. Others who did not patronize this store will recall the excellent service given by articles purchased by their friends. The lasting quality of the articles offered in this sale at special Thanksgiving prices is a great incentive for home-furnishers to supply themselves for the year. We have grown and progressed upon broad lines during the past year. We are able to offer better varities of everything and to preserve the same standard of quality that has made our merchandise wanted throughout Boston and vicinity. You are doing yourself an injustice if you do not inspect our special offerings.

Annual Men's Clothing Sale

This sale is known in New York as the most important men's clothing event of the year, and while this is only the second annual sale in Boston, Saturday night was a response indicating that we will soon be a close rival to the great New York Sale.

Never in the history of our organization have we experienced such enthusiastic response in so short a time.

This clothing is made according to a process that absolutely insures the same correct fit, style and hang of the high-priced tailor-made-to-measure suits and overcoats, and the materials, qualities and workmanship are identical.

Austrian China Dinner Sets, 130 Pieces, $19.87

We have sold a number of these sets to admirers of richly decorated dinner ware, and in each instance they have estimated the value at $35 to $50. This is the first time they have been advertised, and we have 175 sets. The difference between the regular price and our Thanksgiving sale price is so great that it calls for an explanation. Ordinarily 50 sets is a large order, and of course the price could not be as low as when 500 are ordered. Our European organization, representing our four great American stores, secured 500 sets of this famous Austrian ware, at about half price. They possess the quality and the refined thinness of the $50 sets. The shapes are new and distinctive—decorations neat and rich, with double gold lines. Each set contains 130 pieces—the ideal Thanksgiving ware in every respect—$19.87.

British Columbia Amalgamated Coal Company of Portland, Oregon

IN GOOD STANDING

The company maintains offices at 70 State St., Room 54, S. Andrew Hartman being a director and the general agent and manager of the company's business in the East.

A Successful Promotion

The flotation of British Columbia Amalgamated Coal has been a great success. The first allotment of treasury stock was placed on this market the latter part of August, this year, and offered to the public at 25c. per share (par value of the stock is $1.00, full paid and non-assessable). This first allotment is all sold, and the price has advanced to and the stock will, no doubt, reach the par value before long. The company controls 17,500 acres of coal land in the southern part of British Columbia, 160 miles from the city of Vancouver, about five hours' ride on the railroad to tidewater (Pacific Coast). Two great railroads, the Canadian Pacific and the Great Northern, are now building their lines into the coal field, thus providing the best of shipping facilities

50c a Share

Coal, petroleum, iron and copper in great abundance; a virgin country of immense natural resources.

The British Columbia Amalgamated Coal Company intends to start operations early next spring and equip one of its four properties on a basis of 3,000 tons of raw coal per day.

The following letter from the Portland Board of Trade (Portland, Oregon), in answer to an inquiry regarding this company's standing, etc., speaks for itself:

Dear Sir:-

We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 15th inst relative to the personnel of the British Columbia Amalgamated Coal Company. Replying thereto I beg to state that I have personal knowledge of all the officers excepting Mr. Hartman and wish to state that without exception the personnel of this Company is composed of the very best of our citizens, Mr. Durham the President being first Vice-President of the Merchants National Bank, a bank of some seven or eight millions of capital. All the other gentlemen have been well known as men of affairs and standing in the city for many years. In addition to this I might say that as far as my knowledge of the property is concerned I believe that the statement that this property will prove to be a second Crows Nest is amply substantiated by the development work now going on.

Very respectfully yours,

THE PORTLAND BOARD OF TRADE,

FEAR FOR DISBURSEMENTS

Tighter Money Market Is Looked for Soon with an 8 Per Cent. Rate

By Thomas C. Shotwell.

New York, Nov. 24.—Bankers who have been looking over the situation carefully say that tighter money within the next week or two seems almost certain. The rate will be stiffer, regardless of any manipulation that may be done in favor of the pools. This means this: a legitimate six per cent, or perhaps eight per cent, rate may be established.

The peculiar conditions relative of time money for as long as nine months being freely sought after at six per cent. Not only have the gold mines yielded millions beyond all precedent, but the government's printing press has turned out more bank notes by millions than ever in the same space of time.

High authorities estimate the increase of banking circulation for the ... since March 1 next at $100,000,000. On top of this there is certain to be a great increase when the four per cent. loan of July, 1906, is refunded. There are still hopes in high quarters, where blocks of these bonds have been rounded up, that the Government will anticipate payment on them to a considerable extent.

With the return of the President, the opening of Congress and the Presidential message we'll be too near at hand to enable Wall Street to do anything definite in the market for a fortune.

Great Bend Consolidated Mining Co

Treasury Offering at 30 Cents Per Share

We announce the opening of the subscription books of the Great Bend Consolidated Mining Company, which has been incorporated with a capitalization of 1,250,000 shares, of the par value of $1.00 each, full paid and non-assessable. Four hundred thousand shares are in the treasury. Subscription price for treasury shares is 30 cents.

Within a radius of three-quarters of a mile, at the northern end of the Goldfield mining district, there have been opened up, within the past ninety days, half a dozen great ore bodies, two of which have enhanced the value of the stocks of the companies operating them from 300 per cent. to 1,000 per cent. These are the Goldfield Great Bend Mining Company and the Goldfield Daisy Mining Company. Within the past ninety days Great Bend shares have risen in value from 40 cents to around $1.50, and Daisy has advanced from 25 cents to around $3.00 per share.

Adjoining the Great Bend is situated the ground of the Great Bend Consolidated Mining Company, which owns five claims, or in the neighborhood of 100 acres. This ground up to recently was known as the Knickerbocker-Griswold group, having been originally located by two pioneers of the Goldfield mining district. As yet the ground is undeveloped. It is only a prospect. But it is situated so close to the Great Bend, and after an exhaustive examination by competent mining engineers has been pronounced so likely a producer of "high grade," that its value as a prospect is great and the opportunities for investors who purchase treasury stock at this time are enormous.

Mr. John D. Campbell, the noted consulting engineer, declares that, in his opinion, a vein system parallel to that of the Great Bend and Daisy will be opened up on Great Bend Consolidated ground within a short period. Boulders of quartz, indicating the presence of large ore bodies, are in evidence on all five claims of the Great Bend Consolidated, and it appears only a matter of a short period of development work to open up a great mine. The ground of the Great Bend Consolidated occupies the same relative position to the Great Bend and to the Daisy as does the Silver Pick of Goldfield to the Jumbo and Mohawk.

Hoisting apparatus has been ordered by telegraph, and half a dozen miners have been put to work to thoroughly prospect the ground of the Great Bend Consolidated Mining Company. Within ten days the work of sinking the main shaft will have commenced, and within thirty days we expect to have some sensational news for subscribers to the treasury stock.

THE OFFICERS OF THE COMPANY ARE:
President, Governor John Sparks, of Nevada.
Vice-President, John D. Campbell, Mine Operator and Consulting Engineer.
Treasurer, L. M. Sullivan, President of the Sullivan Trust Company.
Secretary, Peter Grant, Treasurer of the Sullivan Trust Company.
Counsel, George D. Pyne, Attorney-at-Law.

In view of the oversubscription of our two other recent Goldfield promotions, namely, the Lou Dillon Goldfield Mining Company, promoted at 30 cents a share, now listed and selling around 48 cents, and the Silver Pick Extension Mining Company, promoted at 30 cents a share, and now on the eve of listing, selling on the curb in Goldfield and San Francisco around 37 cents, it will be the part of wisdom for our friends to immediately telegraph their reservations. Otherwise it is more than likely that they will be disappointed, and be unable to obtain an allotment. Use the wires. It pays.

Our weekly Market Letter free on request. It is the accepted authority of the country on Nevada mining shares.

L. M. SULLIVAN TRUST COMPANY

Goldfield, Nevada

MANSFIELD COPPER

The phenomenal development of this new COPPER property has placed it in the front rank of the investment securities now before the public.

A limited allotment of Mansfield treasury stock has been secured by us and is now, for a short time only, offered to our clients at the present ground-floor price.

The facts regarding the Mansfield COPPER property assure the immediate absorption of this issue and will fully justify early and rapid advances in the price of the security.

The Mansfield Group of Mines comprises 340 acres of rich COPPER lands, located in the Wrightson Mining District, Santa Cruz County, Arizona, eight miles from Patagonia, on the Sonora Railway.

The enormous deposits of high-grade copper-silver ores underlying the seventeen Mansfield claims show outcroppings of veins varying in width from four to THIRTY feet, and so located as to require the minimum expense in production of the refined product. Experts who have examined the property are unanimous in affirming that it is destined to rank among the largest producers of the district. In this vicinity are already included such well-known mines as the Alto, Anaconda-Arizona, Helvestia, Copper Queen, Calumet and Arizona and Greene Consolidated.

Owing to present urgent demand for COPPER and prevailing level of prices, development work has been urgently pushed for a number of months, and the property has now been brought to the very verge of the producing stage. The first shipments of ore to the smelters are promised for the immediate future.

The Company is absolutely free from debt and under management of a board of officers and directors well-known for their successful conduct of large and important mining enterprises. No salaries are being paid except to the General Manager of the Company until the dividend-paying stage is reached.

This issue is for the purpose of securing funds for the earliest possible completion of development work, that the Company may begin at once the marketing of the product.

Stock fully paid and non-assessable. Par value of shares, $1.00 each. No preferred stock, no bonds.

Applications for this stock AT PRESENT PRICE OF 25 CENTS SHOULD BE MADE AT ONCE, and amounts oversubscribed and paid for will be promptly refunded.

We recommend the purchase of this security.

Home Study and Success.

Home Study and Success

This is the era of home study. The air is full of it. There are correspondence schools in various subjects, printed courses and many other advertised plans for education without a personal teacher. Even the phonograph has been utilized to carry words of instruction to every corner of the United States. And this is due to almost the intense eagerness on all sides for a broader education, or for specialized training.

Are you keeping up with the procession of learners? Ordinary office hours will not suffice to place you in the front. It is in the intelligent use of those SPARE MOMENTS AT HOME that the race for success is won.

The pioneer of all guides to home study, and still easily the most complete of them all, is undoubtedly

The Encyclopaedia Britannica!

More than one hundred years ago this first of English reference works came forward with its corps of instructors and array of classified knowledge. As learning grew, it grew, keeping pace with the development of the world. Today it shows the high-water mark of progress. The New Werner 20th Century Edition reaches 31 massive volumes and no less than 25,000 large double column pages to contain it. The greatest authorities from leading universities have written full, complete articles on every art, science, trade and profession for its teeming pages.

Instead of a single limited course of lectures which a "home correspondence school" would give you piecemeal, at a high price, the ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA will give you, at once and for all time, no less than 73 Courses of Study!

An entire supplementary volume is devoted to these outline courses, and with the splendid Encyclopaedia itself at hand you can turn at once to all the material. It gives not alone winter's reading but many winters, and shows interesting channels for every member of the family, from the child who wants to know about toys, games beasts and birds to the graybeard who delights in history and biography.

No matter what your reading taste these 31 volumes will satisfy it; and

Your Opportunity is Now!

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing To Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same purpose.

Charcoal is recognized that the more pure it is, the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal aids in digestion and improves the complexion, whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural but eminently safe cathartic.

In short, the hygienic uses which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best, all round and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat. I do believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores and although in some cases a cheap substitute will be offered, I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any other ordinary charcoal tablets."

JULIAN HAWTHORNE VIVIDLY DESCRIBES THE MIGHTY CONTEST

Wildly Enthusiastic Crowds Make a Scene Rarely Equalled in Gridiron History, and the Blue Everywhere.

By Julian Hawthorne.

Yale Field, New Haven, Nov. 24.—With all the newspapers below prophesying fair weather, and hot the heavens above threatening storm, we started our Syriads to witness the last great pigskin battle of the season of 1900.

Here are two periods of a battle:

The parade [illegible] and the [illegible] after [illegible] passed here the present contributor, Yale immensely preponderated. Blue flags fluttered from the windows of the countless railway trains that crept hither from New York. Blue were the colors displayed by the [illegible] which dotted the highways, and over the noses of their enthusiastic occupants. The New Haven depot was an arrangement in blue, and blue banners concealed the architectural beauties of the houses on both sides of the way to Yale Field. Men and women walked or drove swathed in blue; the wares of peanut venders along the route were done up in blue paper, and, beholding all these symptoms, even the expression on the faces of the sporadic Crimson sympathizers who strayed here and there had a bluish tinge.

The betting was said to favor the Blue; but the only investor that felt entirely safe was the New York and New Haven railroad, which won one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, whether Yale or Harvard finished with the superior score.

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE OF THE YALE-HARVARD BATTLE

The preliminary practice of Yale is fast and sharp and they look in fine top condition. The kicking is good, and some excellent catching is shown. Roome is in the game, and Knox is out of it, which leaves the team about as it was in the Princeton game. Harvard appears in flaming scarlet blankets and black sweater over crimson ones. To outward appearance the teams are physically well matched.

BLOCK PUNT AMID WILD CHEERS.

Yale wins the toss and takes the north end of the field. Burr kicks off for Harvard. Jones runs it back to the 20-yard line. Yale kicks to Knox. The punt is blocked amid wild cheers. Wendell gets the ball and makes ten yards. Harvard takes five yards more through Yale, and then three [illegible]. A kick is blocked by Yale, but the ball [illegible] fumbled by Yale, and is won on the 20-yard Yale line. Yale tries a fake kick, but the runner is brought down for no gain. Another Yale punt down the field is run back to Harvard's 45-yard line, and from that Harvard goes through Yale's line for eight yards. A try for an end [illegible] Harvard fail and the ball goes to Harvard's 30-yard line. Harvard has [illegible] and Yale is for holding. Yale a Stonewall When Line Is in Danger; Strong in Strategy and Attacks

STORY OF CONTEST, PLAY BY PLAY, AS VIEWED BY EXPERTS

ROOME SCORES BLUE'S ONLY TOUCHDOWN

Plunge Follows Long Forward Pass by Veeder, Who Kicks the Goal.

By I. S. Clark.

New Haven, Nov. 24.—After a delay of seven minutes beyond the scheduled hour, or at 2.07, Yale and Harvard lined up for the great game. Yale had won the toss and selected the goal favored by the North wind, which was blowing briskly down the field.

There was some surprise to see Knox start the game at left half instead of Roome, and also Howard Jones at right end when Alcott was supposed to be first choice, but these two men did not play very long in the game.

On the opening play, Burr, for Harvard, kicked off to Veeder on his seven-yard line, and he ran out to Yale's thirty-five-yard mark, where the first scrimmage occurred. A smashing play on right tackle got no gain for Yale, with Veeder carrying the ball, and Veeder tried to get off a punt. The ball went low and only a short distance, with all the players scrambling for it but out of bounds on Yale's forty-five-yard line, McDonald getting the ball.

Worked the Forward Pass.

Harvard immediately showed her hand at the forward pass game by making the relay, Foster to Newhall to start out on end. The Harvard men [illegible] in massé on the back, and [illegible] towards Yale's goal, little Starr catching it nicely, and he was never headed till he had covered twenty yards around Poole's end, landing the ball [illegible] twenty-five yards from Yale's goal post.

[illegible] signed off a couple of yards to [illegible] Lincoln got a length of [illegible] but the ball was at a nice point on [illegible] Newhall immediately [illegible] to the centre, and Harvard had taken the ball [illegible] post of a scrub.

Hicks [illegible] through the centre [illegible] and Stoker [illegible] Knight had [illegible] Newhall's foot [illegible] Harvard's [illegible] Lincoln [illegible] Yale's [illegible] Knight [illegible] Yale's [illegible] Yale ends were down on it.

Made Seven on Double Pass.

On a double pass Lincoln to Foster [illegible] off and for seven yards. Wendell plunged his bulk into the scrubby mass of [illegible] bodies for four yards, but Yale smeared the next play when Foster took the ball at right tackle. Offside play cost Harvard five yards. Lincoln on a fake [illegible] made up the yards. Burr was [illegible] Yale's centre and [illegible] the ball, but Burr was holding so [illegible] and when he [illegible] Yale's ends were down [illegible] Burr's punt was [illegible] line. Burr at [illegible] twenty-five [illegible] the ball on Yale's forty-two yard line, and he never got away from Harvard's speedy ends for a [illegible] gain, as Osborne's position [illegible] a little better on the [illegible] getting a couple of yards. Veeder kicked off to kick the ball going over the [illegible] and [illegible] the ball came to the [illegible] At this point Abott, the regular end for Yale, retired in the [illegible] and Howard Jones [illegible].

Bloody Battle Between Militia and Mob at Hamilton in Trolley Strike.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN WOUNDED BY SOLDIERS

Cars Are Ruined, Barns Blown Up with Dynamite, One Man Killed.

Hamilton, Ont., Nov. 24.—The most serious trouble yet to have taken place in connection with the street car strike occurred today when there was a serious clash between the police and the militia and a large force of strikers. Scores of persons were injured in the melee, and it is feared two or three are mortally hurt.

Women and children are reported to have been ruthlessly attacked by the troops in charge of the rioters. During the afternoon crowds filled the streets, and the news of the clashes of the militia and police brought a certain percentage of the citizens out to spend the afternoon in the streets with their families. Many women were present, and the crowds were peaceably disposed. No trouble was looked for until the militia were called out. Then the crowds assembled in front of the armories and would not leave. Soon the call to the strike breakers to parade was issued, and the crowds refused to disperse. Suddenly, without a word of warning, the militia charged with fixed bayonets. Women and children were trampled upon in the rush, and many were injured. Some of the wounded are in a serious condition, and it is feared that several will die.

The militia were called out by the police commission, which has been in session all day. The commission was appealed to by the strikers to withdraw the militia, but refused to do so. Then the militia were ordered to charge the crowds, and did so. Scores of persons were injured in the melee, and it is feared two or three are mortally hurt.

We Want Your Trade

WE ARE DISTILLERS

and therefore able to sell you wines and liquors at a much lower price than anyone else, on account of the fact that we save you the middleman's profit. We must buy the goods from the distiller, and in turn make a profit or we have no sales to you. We don't either charge a higher price or in any manner lower the quality of the goods. We sell direct to you from the distillery, and being distillers we know the high grade quality and age of every drop of liquor that we sell. We guarantee satisfaction and know that if you order from us once you will be a continual customer.

Remember, the point that is important, is that every bottle of liquor we sell is bottled in FULL QUART BOTTLES, and not five bottles to the gallon, as you have been in the habit of getting from others. We pay the express on all orders. Write today for our

WINE AND LIQUOR PRICE LIST, FREE and containing directions for mixing fancy drinks. This list contains many more kinds of goods than mentioned here, and we know that we are on the right track in selling only the best goods at the lowest prices.

NEGRO FUGITIVE SLIPS BAND OF PURSUERS.

Maine Officers Completely Baffled by Resourceful Desperado.

NOW FEAR HE MAY HAVE CROSSED INTO CANADA

Bangor, Me., Nov. 24.—Of all of the hundreds of men from Warden Norton down, who have been pursuing the negro fugitive, Minot St. Clair Francis, since he escaped from State Prison in Thomaston, on November 12, not one to-night has the least idea where the hunted refugee really is. The search is still on in the woods about Monroe.

Since his escape Francis has been pursued by not fewer than five hundred men. The strange thing about it all is that through all the long pursuit in Knox and Waldo counties, and up to within a few miles of Bangor, not one of the dozen people who live in that section has been face to face with the hunted man or close enough to say whether or not suspects seen were really the convict.

May Be on Wrong Trail.

It is even said now by some that the man that Warden Norton is after may not be Francis at all. Shortly after Francis made his escape from Thomaston Fred E. Russell, imprisoned for breaking and entering a United States post office, was released from that institution. Russell declared that he intended to go to Boston, but it was found that he only went as far as Hallowell, Me.

Russell's disappearance has led many to think that the officers may be pursuing him, thinking that they are really closing in on Francis.

Keep Guard at Woods.

The best that Warden Norton can do now is to continue to beat the woods around Monroe, and if he does flush it the negro is not there then he will have no idea in the world where to look for the man, as he may have escaped long since by boat or motor car on the Bangor line, having been able to steal his way there by freight train.

SCORE CAMBRIDGE FIRE PROTECTION

Business men of Cambridge are discussing with interest the report of the representatives of National Board of Underwriters, William H. Robinson, and Charles R. Baker, who made a thorough examination of conditions in the city's fire department last July, in which the present system is severely criticised and many suggestions for improvements are made.

It is claimed that the alarm service is unreliable, that more regular firemen are needed, that engineers should be employed to inspect the engines, that two additional engine companies are needed, and that the water supply is inadequate on account of the different companies using the same mains for the present.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all-er', mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew it well when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in such a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. T. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold in drug stores and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more pleasant and effective preparation.

MILD COSSACK JOLTS WAKE SYMPHONY.

Dr. Muck Gives Audience Slight Taste of Real Russian Music in Glazounoff Work.

PETSCHNIKOFF IS HEARD AS SOLOIST

By Kent Perkins.

At the sixth Symphony concert of the season last night Dr. Muck got entirely away from the classical and the conventional by means of a musical trip to the land of the Czar.

He accompanied the journey with a goodly number of orchestral jolts that thoroughly waked up the big, brilliant audience of Symphony patrons and they seemed to like it. There was livelier enthusiasm than at almost any previous concert this season.

You can't ride any distance at all into the Russian music country without a lot of good, hard bumps, but Dr. Muck was considerate of his passengers last night and took them over a comparatively smooth road. Perhaps he will give them a thorough taste of the rocky stuff to discover sometime and then they will know what real Russian traveling is like.

First Dr. Muck gave last night Rimsky-Korsakoff's overture to the opera, "The Betrothed of the Czar." This was gentle compared with what he might have done from this composer, but it helped to prepare the way.

Petschnikoff Soloist.

Then came Alexander Petschnikoff, violinist, the soloist of the evening, who played Tschaikowsky's Concerto in D major, op. 35. His work was scrappy and lacked definiteness in spots, but it was received with an enthusiastic outburst of applause.

Last came the Symphony, Glazounoff's, in E flat Major No. 3, op. 55, which had the first Boston hearing. The orchestra had begun the journey in the Rimsky-Korsakoff's overture with abounding spirit and then jumped into the Symphony under the lively spur of Dr. Muck's vigor with a due enthusiasm.

Brought Out All Its Power.

In consequence Glazounoff's work was heard with all the glow, sonority and booming climaxes that can be given to it. But it is not strong's Russian till the last movement is reached. The scherzo and andante, its central portions are reminiscent of Mendelssohn and Berlioz and one forgets in hearing them that he is supposed to be in Glazounoff.

With the final section, however, the composer's Russian colors that were to be found it was here that the staid symphony took last night got the chief jumps that Dr. Muck chose to give them. As jolts they were quite delivered with magnificent force and bounty of tone and the fervor with which they conveyed seems to indicate that some good, hard Cossack rough riding is the ordinary diet for a conductor.

There won't come at the next concert, December 1, however, at the program for which was taken from Brahms, Liszt and Bruckner, with Moritz Rosenthal as the soloist.

SUNDAY CONCERTS TO-NIGHT WILL BE ATTRACTIVE

The concert to be given at Keith's this evening will be for the benefit of the Carney Hospital. On the program will appear Tom Edwards, Emma Carus, Macy, Hall and company, Hungarian boys' band, Lee Harlem, Myron and Mack, Joseph Hart and Co., Marzella and Millay, and Kimball and Donovan.

An attractive bill of vaudeville favorites has been arranged for the concert at the Globe for to-night. Among the names are Sir George Evans' Johnny Boys; Mary Dupont and company in "Left at the Post;" Lew Hawkins, "The Chesterfield of Minstrelsy;" Hassen Ben Ali's Arabian troupe; Sisson and Rae; Joe Bunke, the Kenna, Montgomery and Waddell, three Mortons and the Globescope.

At the orpheum this evening one of the features will be a violin recital by Rudolph Kopta and Kodjan. Lally Hall will also introduce all of the artists who have been appearing with Keelan at the Orpheum during the week.

To-night will be given a concert at the Bowdoin Square Theatre. Hooper and Burns, with their highly entertaining act; Mlle. Victoria, the Brodway, the Williams Brothers, Mercer and Kramer, Whalen and Martell, Lew Wilson, Burt Earlland, the Dwyers and Raymond and Sorrento are the acts.

Another big concert will be given at the Howard Athenaeum. Bonnie Gaylord, the most sensational and thrilling aerial act ever seen in Boston, will be the feature attraction. Others will include Marshall and Tucker, Hickey comedians, Carroll and Gorman, Holmes comedians, the Floods and their big Trick Mule, Hayes and Lester, Lillian Mackings, Charles D. Weber, juggler, Sid Gilbert and Dorothy, the Columbian four and the Vitascope.

PROFESSORS DEBATE WHILE STUDENTS PLAY FOOTBALL.

Twenty-four Universities Are Represented in Meeting of College Association Held at Cambridge Yesterday.

While an army of Yale and Harvard men were cheering the football teams on Soldiers' field on the gridiron at Cambridge yesterday a different sort of debate was going on at the Phillips Brooks House in Cambridge.

Learned professors were trying to kick rhetorical goals on the abstruse question, "Should men bearing the same title in any institution receive the same pay?"

Papers were read by President D. C. Gordon of Lehigh and Stanford University, Professor H. B. Hutchins of Michigan University. They were listened to by the heads of twenty-four American colleges and universities who had assembled to discuss the problems of educational administration and curriculum. The official title of the gathering is the Association of American Universities.

The thorny question debated yesterday provoked much diversity of opinion, but no unanimity thought it would be unwise to have a "wage scale" for professors. It was argued that it did not take into account the necessity of adjusting remuneration according to efficiency and so likely to discourage best effort.

"To work like the labor union system of same pay for all in the same trade," it was said.

GAYNOR SAYS VOTERS ARE TO BLAME FOR TRUST ABUSES

TELLS PEOPLE THEY CHOOSE LAW-MAKERS

Noted Men at Economic Club Banquet Discuss Modern Problems.

PREDATORY RICHES SCORED

"Trusts exist by virtue of statutes smoked through the legislatures, through your General Court or Legislature here in Massachusetts," declared Supreme Court Justice William J. Gaynor of New York last night in the course of an eloquent address at the banquet of the Economic Club in the American House.

"We are attributing to blame for the existence of the trusts, for we elected representatives to our Legislatures to pass these statutes. They are responsible for the kind of people which is under the lure of the splendid intelligence and integrity of the people of this country from one end to the other.

Voters Are Responsible.

"While you were clamoring, and after these candidates for office had clamored on the stump, these very men you elected passed the laws enabling the formation of these trusts. When the future historian writes that and about the railroad rebates the greatest crime of our day, he will be bound to say that the generation that permitted this to go on for a quarter of a century must be loaded back upon as a generation practically lost to all moral sense.

"The trusts and great corporations no doubt have done a great deal of good, how much evil; how many broken homes, how many broken hearts must be on the great crime of rebating, the greatest crime of this day and generation are all over this land? Some people will say, 'It does not affect me.' Poor fools! Anything that affects the course of commerce affects you."

Prominent Men Present.

Two hundred and fifty men of prominence in Boston's business, social and political life heard and applauded Judge Gaynor's remarks. Henry Clews, the New York banker, Franklin H. Wentworth, the veteran leader, and Charles Francis Adams also talked on the topic of the evening. "In great individual or corporate wealth is a menace to republican institutions?" President William H. Lincoln presided and presented the speakers.

"The honest dollar is not under the ban in this country yet," continued Justice Gaynor. "But the dishonest dollar, the wealth handed in our laws, the wealth by which our legislatures, I will not say courts, but by which our official life is being corrupted in this country, by which the few are perverting the functions of the government, is under the ban of condemnation.

"There is no objection to or dread of honestly acquired wealth in this country. There is no natural hatred of the poor against the rich, which is the basis of quicksand on which all demagogues have risen.

Tribute to Roosevelt.

Judge Gaynor paid a warm tribute to President Roosevelt for his efforts to stop the acquisition of wealth by a few individuals, which is the basis of quicksand on which all demagogues have risen.

Freight Rate Favoritism.

Judge Gaynor then spoke of the acquisition of dishonest fortunes by favoritism in freight rates on the railroads and said:

"It has been difficult to get some people to understand that our railroads are not private roads, but are public highways just as much so as our roads which are along side of them. Mr. Bryan recently suggested that government should take over the railroads and run them. He based this on the premise that the railroad is a monopoly and that there should be no private monopolies. His conclusion is not sound. I do not see that his premise is, although it is a telling note or startling. But the suggestion of government ownership and operation when three-fifths of the railroads of the country are owned and operated by the government."

Mr. Clews spoke, in part, as follows:

"A great amount of wealth in the hands of one person enables him to contribute to the establishment of extensive productive industries and other large enterprises requiring much capital. These are important, because they aid in developing the country and accelerate its progress. Many of our greatest railroad, manufacturing, commercial and agricultural enterprises owe their existence and success to great individual wealth.

"In keeping with the undeserved abuse of wealth, which is entitled to no serious consideration, we are confronted by the loud assertion, made by extremists, that some limit should be set to the amount of property an individual may own. The impracticability of any such limitation or any such measure are at once apparent. You might as well try to limit the capacity or energy of individuals. Where you prevent an individual from accumulating you at once discourage effort.

Favors Inheritance Tax.

"In a government like ours, there is no question that the owner of a great fortune has public functions and responsibilities that must be recognized, and an inheritance tax, in the first place, or a graduated tax to encourage the dividing of large fortunes in several parts, instead of a sole legacy, is desirable. Provision should be made, would lessen the danger of wills proceeding from the minds of irresponsible heirs, at the same time affording the fortunate holder some measure of assurance that his estate would not at once be dissipated by extravagance.

"The remedy for corporation scrounging is found in publicity. This publicity is the Favoritism in railroad rates is the greatest crime of our day and generation.

The government should appoint the general freight agent of every railroad.

Commercial trusts exist by virtue of statutes.

If there be blame, we ourselves are to blame.

There is no danger of the confiscation of private property in this country.

great need of the day and the public should demand it.

"People Divided Into Classes."

Mr. Woolworth declared that there is an influence operating in this country today that "divides the people into classes as in the old world." He demanded to know what the possessors of the great "unearned wealth of the country intended to do when the men with votes in the congressional districts in New York city who are not getting their just share of the wealth produced, arise and with their votes demanded their rights.

"To-day I want to ask you what you think of the United States Senate," he asked. The gathering laughed. "What do you think of Mr. Aldrich, whom they call in Washington the 'General Manager of the United States?'"

Adams Denounces Tariff.

Mr. Adams denounced the proposed ship subsidy which he declared would "lay the foundation of trusts," in the same way that the tariff has. He called the tariff a humbug, and gloried in being a "free trader."

"You may have all the discussion you please," he concluded, "all the laws to equalize wealth, but so long as you permit this bleeding the tariff to continue, you will be giving a license to steal; just so long you will have inequality of wealth, bloated fortunes, and political corruption."

MAYOR THURSTON IS IGNORED BY WAGE EARNERS' CLUB.

Premeditated Slight to Cambridge's Chief Executive by Labor Men Stirs City's Political Circles to Its Depths

Political circles in Cambridge were stirred last evening over the fact that Mayor Charles H. Thurston was ignored by the Cambridge Wage Earners' Club in the invitations sent to the successful nominees in the recent caucuses to appear before the Wage Earners on candidates' night.

That organized labor may select candidates and support them, and have their interests the Wage Earners' Club extended invitations to all Mayor Thurston excepted, to meet on next Tuesday evening in Cooperative Labor Union Hall, 622 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridgeport.

They will then be questioned as to their position on all matters of interest to wage earners, and organized labor. Invitations to all candidates and Common Council candidates were sent out by Clarence B. Alverson, secretary of the Wage Earners' Club and the Central Labor Union.

Regarding the omission of Mayor Thurston, all the invitations treated him in the following manner:

"It was voted that exception be taken in the case of Mayor Charles H. Thurston to the recent nomination in caucus, in which case the Mayor shall be known in this invitation as having successful nominees in caucus."

Those invited included Walter C. Ward-well, non-partisan candidates for Mayor; Joseph J. Dolan, Democratic candidate; Peter F. Donovan, candidates for assessor; twenty-three candidates for aldermen and the Common Council candidates.

STEEL TRUST RAISES WAGES FOR 180,000

New York, Nov. 24.—The Steel Trust has fallen in line and next year 180,000 employes will receive a total increase in wages of $10,000,000, Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors, made the announcement. Common labor at the manufacturing plants of the subsidiary companies of the United States Steel Corporation will be raised 10 cents a day, beginning January 1. Men in other positions will receive a raise in proportion.
